HALIFAX, Wednesday, July 18.

The Royal Mail steamship Canada, Captain Lewis, has passed this port on Wednesday, the 7th inst., outward bound, at 10 40 P. M.

The Canada passed going on the 5th July, the steamship City Constantine of Quebec Rock, inward.

The Canada left Halifax at 2 P. M. for Boston, where she will be due about 10 o'clock on Thursday evening.

The news presents no feature of special importance.

THE WAR.

Lord RAGLAN was buried on the 5d of July; with all the pomp which circumstances permitted.

There are rumors that PELISSIER is about to be superseded.

Since the repulse of the 18th June, the Allies have been strengthening their advances against the Malakoff and PELISSIER's latest dispatch, dated July 4, says his works are progressing satisfactorily.

Gen. BOSQUET telegraphed on the 4th that there was nothing new, since his last message.

The main facts have been already stated of the unsuccessful attack upon Sebastopol on the 18th of June. The papers yet the Canada contain further details, including the dispatch of PELISSIER.

It is stated that General MANEAN's French Division, on the way to attack the fort on the extreme right, by the Carénage Harbor, commenced the attack prematurely, and before the other divisions had taken their ground. MANEAN fell mortally wounded, and his division being thrown into disorder, the Russians turned their concentrated fire upon the next division, as it came up under General BRUNET, and shattered it badly. BRUNET also fell. Orders were then given to withdraw the troops into the trenches, although General AVERYANE had sometime reached the Malakoff Tower. The retreat was effected with good order, but with great loss.

When Lord RAGLAN saw the defeat of the First French Division, he hastily ordered an attack on the Redan, to afford a diversion in favor of the French, although it was previously intended that the British should not attack until the French had captured the Malakoff, inasmuch as the Malakoff's guns quite commanded the Redan. So far as civilians at a distance could judge, Lord RAGLAN's order to attack was a great error, for the British storming party not being sufficiently strong to carry the works, were repulsed with much slaughter. A curious incident is, that Gen. EYRE, with 2,000 British troops, penetrated into the suburbs of Sebastopol itself, and held possession of the houses in one street for seventeen hours; but being totally unsupported, he retired at nightfall. The inference is, that had the assault been general, or systematically planned, the city would have fallen, or at least its first line of defence might have been carried.

French letters of June 25th say that the army was full of confidence. The approaches were pushing forward to the Malakoff Tower, and a French battery of thirty guns was nearly completed, in front of the Careening Bay, to keep off the Russian ships, their fire having caused much loss on the 18th.

Vienna papers say that GORTSCHAKOFF had sent for 24,000 more men, as he had reinforced LIPRANDI's army with another division.

The Turks and Sardinians, under OMER PACHA and Gen. MARMORA, have made excursions in the lateral valleys of the Tchernaya, without meeting resistance.

Numerous works of art, captured from the Kertch Museum, and from Gen. WRANGEL's private collection, are on the way to Paris.

Mr. SNOW, the Commissioner sent by the London Times to the Crimea, to administer the balance of the Hospital Fund, fell sick from over-exertion, and "routing" excluded him from the very hospitals he was aiding. He was carried in a scorching sun to the church at Balaklava, where he died a victim to official inhumanity.

The Turco-British contingent force, now numbering 6,000 men, is in camp, near Domanderes.

Careful estimates show that this war has already cost half a million of lives, and yet no decisive battles have taken place.

A dispatch from Berlin, dated July 4, states that the town of Nystadt, at the entrance of the Gulf of Bothnia, has been bombarded and destroyed.

Russian accounts, under date of June 19, say, the allied flotilla of 180 guns fired for eight hours against the batteries at the mouth of the Narva, without effect, and then withdrew to Seskar Island.

JUNE 20—The Allies made a descent on Kotka Island, destroyed the telegraph and burnt the Government stores.

JUNE 21—Some of the allied steamers took soundings in Nystadt Roads, while others fired some hours on Port Revel, without doing any material injury.

JUNE 22 AND 23—Occasional shots were exchanged between gun-boats employed in shore and the Revel batteries.

The Journal of St. Petersburg publishes a correspondence respecting the recent affair at Hango, stating that the flag of truce was not visible, and accusing the English of making improper uses of flags of truce generally.

JULY 5—The bulk of the allied squadron was off Cronstadt.

ENGLAND.

The business before Parliament was not of an important nature.

Messrs. ROEBUCK and DUNCOMBE had asked for a Committee of Inquiry into the alleged brutal conduct of the Police at the Hyde Park demonstration against the Sunday trading bill, but were refused.

On Friday night Mr. MILNER GIBSON asked the Government for an explanation as to Lord JOHN RUSSELL's recent conduct at Vienna, in stating, among other things, that Great Britain never contemplated a restoration of Poland and Hungary. Messrs. CORBEN, ROEBUCK and DISRAELI, all attacked Lord JOHN, after which the matter was dropped.

General PEEL was to move the previous question against Mr. ROEBUCK's vote of censure.

Lord ELGIN, it is said, will be appointed Postmaster General.

The magnificent iron paddle-wheel steamship Persia, of 3,600 tons and 1,000 horse power, was launched in the Clyde on the 24 of July. She will be ready to take her place in the Cunard line in October next.

M. PETERSON, the Russian Secretary of Legation at Lisbon, was recently discovered on board an English steamer returning from Southampton to Lisbon, he having been on a secret mission to France and England. The American Minister to Portugal, they say, recognized him.

FRANCE.

On the 6th of July, the Legislature voted the loan of 750,000,000 francs. In addition to this loan, an increase of taxation is proposed, namely, one-third increase of duty on all spirits, tea per cent. on railway passengers and goods and a new war "decime" of indirect taxation, is expected will produce seventy millions of francs per annum.

The Emperor's speech has been variously commented on, but on the whole is regarded favorably. The kit at Austria is considered as well merited. It is reported that the Austrian Minister has asked for an explanation.

SPAIN.

A dispatch old Marseilles, dated July 8th, states that a rising had taken place in Catalonia. The difficulty is, nominally, respecting the rate of wages. Two manufacturers had been assassinated at Barcelona. The National Guard refused to march, and the Captain-General had shut himself up in the Citadel, with a few faithful troops, whence he sent mediators to the insurgents, who received them with shouts of Viva Espartero.

A Madrid telegraph dispatch of the 8th says that the insurgents still held Barcelona.

Accounts from Perpignan mentioned the defeat of a Carlist leader.

The outbreak at present seems more like a riot than an insurrection.

The correspondent of the London Times says the Spanish Minister at Paris had a long interview with the Emperor on the state of Spain, and Napoleon had promised his support to prevent any attempt to dethrone Queen ISABELLA.

The Spanish Government is said to be in pursuance of NAPOLEON, and contrasts his exertions to the cause of order with LOUIS PHILIPPE's duplicity. Various indications show that NAPOLEON is manufacturing political capital in Spain.

ITALY.

In Sardinia much depression of feeling exists on account of the mortality that has befallen the Sardinian troops in the Crimea. Turkey appoints a resident Minister to Sardinia.

The Neapolitan Government is reported to have sanctioned the expenditure of an hospital for convalescents of the allied army at the Bolte of Isabia, but this seems questionable.

PRUSSIA.

The King is recovering from his recent indisposition.

RUSSIA.

Some English papers contain statements respecting revolutionary movements in Russia in favor of CONSTANTINE as Emperor, but they are manifestly inventions.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Other prices unchanged. There is no pressure on the market, nor any large quantity offering, and that the above decline of an eighth is somewhat irregular, and merely to facilitate below fair. The week's sales add up 42,000 bales, including 11,700 on speculation, and 2,300 for export.

From the Rio Grande.

NEW-ORLEANS, Monday, July 16.

The steamer Neptune has arrived here with Brownsville dates to the 11th inst. General WOLL left Matamoras on the 7th, and assumed the command of the forces at Reynosa, which amounted to twelve or thirteen hundred men. The Revolutionists, numbering 2,000, had taken Camargo and were marching on Reynosa, where a battle was consequently expected. General CAVERO, with 600 troops, remained at Matamoras. The Revolutionists had issued a decree declaring all the supporters of SANTA ANNA traitors, and punishable with death. The Caballos Tariff of 30 per cent, ad valorem, is in force at all the Rio Grande ports.

The Lexington (Mo.) Convention.

ST. LOUIS, Wednesday, July 18.

During the evening session on the second day of the Convention at Lexington, Mo., great enthusiasm prevailed on the subject of President SHANNON's address. Finally the thanks of the Convention were tendered him, and a copy of the address requested for publication, amidst tremendous excitement, during which the President threw down his mallet and threatened to leave his seat.

On the third day there was also a stormy session. Col. YOUNG, of Boone County, charged Major ROLLINS, of the same County, with writing a letter advising the Whig delegates to withdraw. The charge was investigated and pronounced unfounded.

A platform was then adopted in the following effect: That the agitation of the Slavery question in Congress on the part of the Free States must finally result in a dissolution of the Union. That the resolution of non-Slaveholding States not to admit another Slave State is a declaration of hostility to the Constitution. That the diffusion of Slavery tends to ameliorate the condition of the Slave, and maintain the equilibrium against the non-Slaveholding majority. That the Kansas-Nebraska act and Fugitive Slave Law are cordially approved. That the incorporation of monopoly associations for the purpose of colonization in Kansas is repugnant to the spirit of our institutions, and is an attempt to thwart the purposes of the Constitution and the enactments of Congress. That these Colonies will necessarily lead to resistance; and while they disclaim any intention to interfere with actual settlers, they will protect themselves and property. Eighteen border counties in Missouri contain 50,000 Slaves, which will be valueless if Kansas becomes the abode of Abolition fanatics. That they appeal to the good sense of the North to put down fanatical aggressions, and emigrant aid associations, and leave Kansas to a natural settlement.

A Committee of five was appointed to publish an address to the people of the United States, setting forth a history of the Kansas excitement. A copy of the same and the resolutions of the Convention, were ordered to be forwarded to the Executive of each State in the Union.

Resolutions were also adopted calling on the Missouri Legislature to legislate within the Constitution against the products and merchandise of Massachusetts and these Northern States, practically nullifying the Fugitive Slave law; and that the welfare of Slaveholding States and the interests of the Union, require the enactment of a law in said State suppressing Abolition and Free-Soil publications and opinions.

The Convention adjourned sine die.

Governor Reeder's Message to the Kansas Legislature.

KANSAS, Monday, July 16.

Governor REEDER's Message to the Legislature of Kansas is published. He contends for the right of the people to settle their own affairs, uninfluenced by other States. He says the Territorial Legislature may act on the question of Slavery to a limited and partial extent, and temporarily regulate it in the Territory; shows what laws are now in force; directs attention to a definition of the boundaries of counties and districts and the qualifications of voters; recommends a stringent Liquor Law on account of the Indians; thinks that a light tax only is required. He contends that the preemptions may be taxed; recommends the immediate establishment of a seat of Government, and announces that the population of the Territory was 2,363 females, and 5,133 males.

The Legislature fixed on Shawnee Mission as the temporary seat of Government. The Governor vetoed the same, when the Legislature passed it over the veto and adjourned to meet at Shawnee Mission.

The passengers proceeded to Turks Island, which they reached in five days' time, where Col. KINNEY was negotiating for the charter of another vessel to carry them to Nicaragua. The party were in excellent spirits, notwithstanding their disaster.

It is rumored about that an officer of the expedition returned in the schooner Active, who registered his name at the Revere House as J. SMITH. Also, that Mr. SMITH, accompanied by FLETCHER WEBSTER, Esq., immediately started for New-York.

We learn from Erie, that a store in that place was entered on Monday night by a burglar, who in the course of his operations awoke two young men who were sleeping in the store, one of whom took a rifle and ordered the burglar who had just got outside the door, to stop, but paying no attention to the request, and persisting in his attempt to escape, he was shot in the neck. Upon an examination the wounded man was discovered to be a carpenter who has heretofore been considered a respectable citizen. It is now supposed that he is the person who has committed several of the recent burglaries which have taken place at Erie. It is impossible for him to survive.

THE ASTOR LIBRARY.

The Complaint of a Poor Scholar.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

A paragraph on your editorial page, yesterday, states a case of gross insult to which a lady has been exposed at the Aster Library. The case is not singular. I have heard details of several such instances, none the less offensive because the ladies who figured in them could not be described as "very charming" in outward semblance, however elegant may have been their interior culture and finish. I would sooner recommend them to go, unattended, to the Bowery Theatre, than to the Astor Library, so far as immunity from the insults of officials and underlings is concerned.

That anything in pantaloons is to receive ordinary courtesy at the hands of the persons in charge, is an idea that became obsolete during the first week succeeding the opening. That is no part of the system. To escape with a mere negation of civility is unusual good fortune; ingenuity seems to be tasked to contrive some opening for positive insult. I intend, Mr. Editor, to be—in a humble way—a scholar,—one whose studies will, I hope, never be finished while there is a Universe, and an Eternity to employ in its exploration and enjoyment; and to whom books, for want of means and a field for personal observation, furnish in his present stage of existence, the chief intellectual pabulum. The bequest of Mr. ASTOR was hailed by me, as by thousands like me, with enthusiasm. At last we were to have a repository of books filling all the lacunes of our Bibliographical stores, meeting every wish—literary, scientific and professional; and by its popular character, placing within the reach of poor students like myself, resources hitherto barred from us by an ocean and poverty. The names of Messrs. WASHINGTON IRVING and SAMUEL B. RUGGLES, among the managers, and of Dr. COGSWELL as Librarian, seemed to be ample guarantees that the Library, in the judiciousness of its selection, and in the liberality of its management, would be all that the literary public, if not the public at large, might desire. The opening I waited for impatiently; and restraining myself for two or three days after the event, went, saw, experienced a slight taste of the treatment afforded by the waiters, and came away sick at heart. I tried it again; and after that, resolved so long as a particle of self-respect was left me, not to repeat the attempt. But pressure for an authority drove me thither once more. I wanted to consult the first edition of Mr. TODD's Milton—the only one in the library, by the by, although out of a half dozen later and more accessible ones, the only one designated as incomplete and comparatively worthless by Mr. TODD himself—and after some little delay it was brought me. Having noted what I wanted, I found that without the use of Mrs. COWDEN CLARKE's admirable Concordance to Shakespeare, I could proceed no further, and accordingly handed in TODD, filled up a fresh check, and with that blandness of address for which your friendship, Mr. Editor, will, I am sure, give me credit, requested the additional favor. The check was flung down contemptuously, and I was harshly informed that the book was shelved in the same case with the Milton, and if I wanted the book, why had I not demanded it in the first instance? I humbly submitted that in the first instance I had anticipated no need for it; and besides, I could not have known its proximity to the book previously called for. Some other application was made to the waiter, at this moment, and leaving me in attendance, he attended to that, at the expense of five minutes, and then proceeded leisurely off with my check. I waited, watch in hand, twenty-five minutes, and at the end of that period the book reached me by the hands of a person whom I presumed to be an Irish porter. At my request, this person, with a politeness I had never yet experienced in the building, gave me the name of the fellow who took the order, but the memorandum I made of it is unfortunately mislaid. That the delay was gratuitous, the fact of his knowing the case where the volume was to be found, clearly proved. I left the building then and there, deploring that the money of Mr. ASTOR had only furnished a kennel of puppies, to worry and insult the reading public. Such satisfaction as there is in viewing a harem, amid the jeers and abuse of the eunuchs and blackguards, there is in visiting the Astor Library. It is for show alone, and even that under conditions incompatible with the self-respect of a gentleman. Allow me to add, that I have compared my experience with that of scores of others, and it is substantially the same. I have been at the noble Library of Harvard; in that of Yale; I have had occasion to trespass upon the courtesy of the Librarians of the Society, the Mercantile, and the Historical Society Libraries, in this City; and of the Philadelphia Library. I have gone to them as a stranger, and without any better claim than that of a laborious student, and have found in all of them obligingness and courtesy inexhaustible. My table, in any of them, would be piled up with as many authorities on any investigation called for; and still fresh importunities were met with unflagging kindness. It is with indignation that I see so valuable a body of books—a collection so rich in source history, tendered—in the Astor Library, in the custody of creatures as insensible to the value of their charge as the jailors of GALLILEO and GROTIUS. For the credit of the City, and in respect to the memory of the intended benefactor, let us have a radically amended system of management, or let the place be walled up as a provocation and nuisance. C.

NEW-YORK, July 18, 1855.

Republican State Convention.

The outrage perpetrated by the last Congress in repealing the Missouri Compromise, has resulted in the election of an almost unanimous representation in the next Congress from the free States, hostile to the extension of Slavery.

The recent illegal interference with the elective franchise in Kansas by the slaveholders of Missouri, shows this interest to be resolved to carry out its settled purpose in contempt of public sentiment and in violation of the Constitution, as well as of the time-honored Compromise it has overturned.

If the citizens of the Free States would preserve the permanent tranquility of the Union, it can be done only by firmly maintaining their rights under the federal compact, and resolutely enforcing the legitimate powers of the United States Government over the public Territory. Experience has shown that concession only leads to new usurpation, and that in its struggle for political power the Slave interest is equally regardless of the obligations of plighted faith and of the Federal Constitution.

Upon the issue now forced upon the country, New-York is bound by every consideration, whether we look to her past history or her present and future interests, to express no doubtful or hesitating opinion.

Good faith to her sister States requires the clear expression of her firm determination to adhere to, but not to extend, the compromises of the Constitution.

That determination cannot be manifested by placing the State Government in the hands of a party which boasts to have been the steadfast and faithful ally of the slaveholding interest or of a secret association whose representatives from this State in the Philadelphia Convention, by their slavery proclivities, provoked the contemptuous repudiation of their principles and fellowship by the delegates from the other free States. In such hands all honor and character of the Empire State would be sacrificed to the sectional views of the slaveholding oligarchy.

The entire absence of all other political issues is most propitious to the expression of the opinion of this State on this important question, and with the view of affording to their fellow-citizens a suitable occasion, the State Committee appointed at the Auburn Convention in September last, request the Republican electors of this State to appoint in County Conventions on the 15th of August next, two delegates for each Assembly District to meet in convention, at noon on the 26th of September, in the city of Syracuse, to nominate a ticket for the State officers to be chosen in November next.

NEW-YORK CITY.

Preparing for a Roast—Building Houses to be Burnt.

Arrangements for large and destructive fires are going on all over the City. Almost everywhere that a new building is going up, the devil of heedlessness has a hand in the job. He cheapens the mason's work, and arranges to give an extra inch of room on each side of a narrow house, by making thin flues, and stipulates to carry hot air from the furnaces all over the premises, in tin pipes, for a trifle less than safe cemented brick flues would cost. He is a great friend to men of small means, until a right cold snap comes, and the fires are raked up and replenished often, and then he leaves them to the tender mercies of a meagre Fire Insurance policy, and vain regrets that in building they had not consulted safety, as well as a fine front and imposing appearance. The following little story from the late report of the Fire Marshal is pertinent and suggestive:

"A short time since, Judge MORRIS, of the Supreme Court, requested me to examine a house he had just hired, (one of a block of seven dwellings, owned by Wm. B. ASTOR, Esq.) I called in, to assist me, Mr. JOHN A. CREGIER, one of the experienced Assistant Engineers of the Fire Department. Upon going to the place, we found a block of buildings of very pretty finish, with fronts of about sixteen feet each, but in order to give all the room possible, the chimney flues were run up in an eight inch wall, leaving only four inches of brick between the flue and the adjoining house. The kitchen flue from No. 13 ran against the partition wall of No. 11, and it was the same in all the other buildings of the block. The heat from this connection in No. 11 was very great, and spread over a large surface; the base board had split apart from the wall, and the latter was too hot to keep one's hand upon. In fact, we were informed that some days, on applying water to it, the water would hiss and steam away. We could follow the flue all the way to the top of the house, by the excessive heat which it communicated to the wall. On visiting the kitchen of No. 13, the cook told us that she had on that day only a moderate fire in the range; on other occasions she had much "better fires." We next visited No. 9, the residence of Mr. PIKE. We found his premises in nearly a similar heated condition from the range fire of No. 11. He told us that his family would have to abandon the back rooms, as the heat was too great for endurance. The result of our investigation was that we gave a certificate to Judge MORRIS that the premises, No. 11 were in danger of taking fire from an improper connection of chimney flues. The Judge refused to occupy the house, although he had hired it on a lease of three years.

Don't Leave Your Croton Running.

When people go out of town for the Summer, shutting up their houses, it would be well to see that they do not leave the Croton water running. The police were thumping some hour or more at the doors and windows of a handsome house in a fashionable quarter on Tuesday night, trying to wake somebody—though nobody proved to be there—in hopes of getting inside without breaking a door. The Croton was running very freely in the highest story—so freely that it had soaked through each floor, and was lying in puddles in the parlor. So much water is not good for walls, carpets a furniture, and a little care on the part of those who go out for the season might be well repaid by exemption from such mishaps.

The New Medical College.

The walls of the new Medical College, corner of Twenty-third-st. and Fourth-avenue, are rapidly rising. The soil being muddy, heavy piers, concrete and nearly 800 piles of pitched pine, varying from eight to ten inches, and mostly from fourteen to sixteen feet in length, have been deposited and driven, to secure a good foundation. On this subject, a practical builder remarks, that where in New-York the soil is quite muddy, no good a foundation is got by sinking two feet as by going deeper; that, in fact, the accumulation of material is firmer near the surface than below.

The neighboring building, the Free School, was also built in a mud hog, and piles were driven there, besides which the buttresses in the walls add much to the stability of the building. In the new College the expedient of buttresses has not been deemed necessary, though it might be contended it gives the opportunity for architectural display of a particular character. The lines of the College on Twenty-third-street will be about 60 feet, four stories, the basement rusticated with stone. The doorway is to be approached by a double flight of winding steps, protected by an elegant Gothic rail.

The prevailing style is mixed Doric. The side of the building on Fourth-avenue will comprise three stories above the basement, and will be nearly 100 feet in length. The story upon the street is to be fitted up for stores; underneath, cellars are intended as saloons for the sale of various articles. Of the internal arrangements nothing can be seen at present. We understand the building will be complete by the 1st of October. At this moment the interior walls are about 21 feet out of the ground, and little can be judged of the ultimate destination of the building.

The second story will comprise a spacious lecture room, about 50 feet by 45, a laboratory, a Faculty reception room, and other private rooms.

The architects of the new building are Messrs. MEYLAN & BURKE, and the builder is Mr. GEORGE SANDWORTH. Various other elegant structures are rising in the immediate vicinity, especially a church, the lofty spire of which is near completion.

Board of Education.

The usual meeting of this body was held last (Wednesday) night, Mr. W. HISGARD in the Chair. Applications from the School Officers of the Twenty-tieth Ward for appropriation of $124 03, to pay balance of bills for Primary School No. 30, and for the building of privies for the same, were referred to the Committee on Repairs.

THE BILL IN THE SCHOOLS.

The Tenth Ward School Officers presented the following preamble and resolutions, which were referred to the Committee on Communications:

Whereas, According to the thirteenth annual report of the Board of Education, that "For many years it was the uniform rule to read a portion of the Bible every day as part of the opening exercises in the morning," and that the practice in most schools, and in general schools is to not only prohibit, but to refuse to read a copy of God's Holy Word to be found by teaching. Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Commissioners of this Ward, as members of the Board of Education, use their influence to have a portion of the Scriptures read at the opening exercises of such schools where it is now prohibited.

Resolved, That we agree with the honorable Board of Education that "we read the lessons of history in the—Decalogue dyed in blood—whose statutes, equally come up from the records of every nation, if we do not learn and can not though we fan the flame of the inspired truth, that a Righteous God can dwell in a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

Resolved, That our Commissioner read this preamble and resolutions before the Board of Education, as the sentiments of this Board.

The Application of the School Commissioners of the same Ward, (the Tenth,) for permission to purchase a new site, and to erect a building for the accommodation of Grammar School No. 39, was referred to the Committee on Sites and Buildings.

A communication was received from the Executive Committee of the Free Academy, containing the names of the recent graduates.

On motion of one of the members, it was then resolved that the Board adjourn, to meet on Tuesday morning next, at 9½ o'clock, for the purpose of taking part in the commencement exercises of the institution above mentioned.

A resolution moving the suspension of the salary of the Board for the purpose of granting the appropriation of $2,459 74, for extra work in the new school-house in Rivington-street, performed by mechanics who require the money, was passed by a large majority. The consideration of this application, it will be remembered, gave rise to a short heart-rending and eloquent discussion during the two previous sittings of the Board.

The reconsideration of the application for a grant of $25,000 for building a new school-house in Forty-fourth-street, was moved and carried.

On motion, the preamble of the resolution relating thereto was struck out.

The resolution was lost, (though 17 voted in its favor to 13 against,) not being carried by a majority of the whole.

On motion, the bills incurred by the exhibition of needlework, &c., in June last, were ordered to be paid.

Several reports and communications were received; among others a report of the Finance Committee in favor of appropriating $45,000 for the current expenses of the Ward Schools, which was adopted, and the Board adjourned.

Commencement at Sixteenth Ward School, No. 45.

Exercises by the graduating class designed for the Free Academy, from School No. 45, in Twenty-fourth street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues, THOMAS FOULKE, Principal, will take place to-day, commencing at 9 o'clock A. M. Several members of the Brooklyn Board of Education will be present, to see what our schools can do.

Elopement, &c.

In an article in yesterday's TIMES, headed "Elopement in High Life," it was said that "Mr. D——r is a prominent member of Dr. C's Church, Union-square." It is proper to state, in connection, that Mr. D——r is and now a member of that Church, having been excommunicated for his sins connected with this matter.

LONG ISLAND.

Sun Stroke.

An unknown man, apparently a laboring man, was prostrated by the sun in Bedford-avenue yesterday afternoon. Officer DENALIN, of the Fifth District Police, procured a cart and had him conveyed to the Fifth District Station-House. Dr. NORTH was called to attend him. His recovery is doubtful.

☞ The Long Island Railroad Company commences this morning, Thursday, a series of sheap trains to Greenport and Sag Harbor. To leave Brooklyn on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays at 9 A. M., and leave Greenport on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at 10 A. M. Fare out and back $2 25. Fare out only $1 50.

Now, this is sensible. The Company is waking up to its true interests.

Cricket.

NEW-YORK VS. ST. GEORGE'S CLUB.

The second Eleven of these clubs commenced their return match yesterday at 11¼ o'clock, and when time was called, as per agreement, at 6 o'clock, the score stood: New-York, first innings, 199; St. George's, 44; with the loss of only one wicket—so that the game does not look so wonderfully bad. According to the way they played yesterday, the match will not be finished to-day. The heat was tremendous; and the boys, [illegible] Times.

[illegible] Thursday, July 19, 1855.

[illegible] good people, friends of law and [illegible] anxious to know how the Maine Law [illegible] Saratoga. I am not very wise on the [illegible] have made no very diligent inquiry [illegible] of truth, so I cannot make other people [illegible] what. There are three wine-glasses [illegible] every day, just the same now as before the [illegible]—there are three wine glasses [illegible] every other plate. But the gentleman who sits next to me to table did not take wine when the law allowed, and therefore has not changed his habits [illegible] whatever. As far as I observed there are very few who take wine, and [illegible] there are very few who do so as many ladies as gentlemen, as many ministers as barkers, as many [illegible] as lawyers; but it is presumed that each person provides his own supplies of this sort, and also presumed that he purchased them before the Maine law was put in force! At our house there is no bar with its long rows of bottles of "liquid death and damnation,"—there are no glasses standing about suggestive of wine bibbers and all manner of tipplers and topers—we do not see any selling or trafficking, and therefore must conclude there is some [illegible]. There can be no other just conclusion, though there are whispers that the TIMES has not been quite out of the way after all, in its predictions as to the results of high pressure legislation.

We are now in the height of the season, and [illegible] beauty and fashion are at premium; but it is true that beauty and fashion exercise more [illegible] than usual. There is a charming assiduousness, morning, noon and night, in [illegible] which we have never seen [illegible]. It does not amount to indifference or neglect, and is entirely consonant with good [illegible]. It is the least usually an undisputed rule that ladies have come in full dress to dinner; but I have seen many this season at the dinner table in their pretty morning dresses, looking enviably neat and comfortable, and there are many occasions why this is sensible. Those who are invalids often wish to take an after-dinner ride, and those who are well ought to wish to take an after-dinner ramble, and a silk or [illegible] is a most inappropriate costume for the grounds and the dewy grass, and satin slippers are not at all improved by even the nicest gravel walk or sandy pathway. All this sounds very well in poetry, but in real life draggled skirts are anything but pretty. Those who can afford to step into their nicely cushioned and carpeted carriages, and pay $5 an hour for a ride, will not of course wish to dance in midgets; but rides usually terminate at the lake, or some other romantic place, where a walk only needs to be dressed accordingly.

It is very naturally presumed that most of those who have come here are city people, who ought to spend most of their time in the open air, who ought to enjoy a different kind of pleasure from what they have at home, and which they can enjoy only during the little time they are here. The arrangements of the hotels are made for the purpose of giving pleasure-lovers every advantage for enjoyment in their own way. The breakfast is just as good and hot at one as at seven, and the morning may be spent in bed or in the groves with the certainty of not endangering the good attendance one wishes to receive when afflicted with a Saratoga appetite. The dinner is at 3 in our hotel, and at that time all meet in parlor or face the best dinner ever served for fastidious epicures. During the afternoon you may ride or walk, lounge or loiter, till 10 o'clock in the evening, and any time when you enter the dining-room all things will be in order and if you are not satisfied with what is served and those who serve it, it must be because you have no proper idea of a "capital car!"

The evening is the time for dress and gayety—for promenading in the saloons, for sociality and dancing, and in these elegant parlors the richest toilet is not out of place. We believe each of the largest hotels will accommodate between four and five hundred—a small township, as many as compose the country villages among the mountains; but at no time except the dinner hour would one imagine himself in the midst of a great multitude. They are scattered far and wide, in groups and knots and one and one, or solitary strollers, seeking recreation and amusement, and looking up village curiosities. Everybody visits the Indian encampment and buys a trifle or a basket, according to their tastes and necessities; each spring must be visited, and not in all the world can there be found anything more curious than these ever-bubbling fountains. The chemical analysis shows each to be different from the others, and a person of any curiosity cannot help a restless anxiety to know the peculiarity of these several combinations. We ask, but there is no answer—we wonder, but it is all in vain. If it were not that the Saratoganians have learned the secret of coining water into gold far more easily than any solid mineral substance can be thus transformed, it would be worth while to explore the caverns of the earth in these regions. There must be valid curious geological specimens, and not very far below the earth's surface, to send forth such inexhaustible streams of mineral water.

Saratoga Lake, about three miles from the village, is the standard fashionable drive, and many people think it is the only one there is, but I heard a lady persuade a gentleman to introduce him to a different scene and a different landscape every day for a fortnight, in the region of Saratoga, which he bet she could not do, and she won the wager. But the Lake, and the beauty which surrounds it, are worthy of Switzerland or any of Scotia's glens, and such trout as engage its waters, and the way they will serve them up for you at the Lake House, you can only know by coming to see. On the sign which signifies that this is the place, you will see in large letters, "Lake House," and underneath, the picture of the moon in all its glory; and thus, if you are not too obtuse in understanding signs, you will know that Mr. and Mrs. Moon keep the house, and this certainly is next to being the man in the moon!

Last, but not by very far the least, among the pleasures of Saratoga life, are the pleasant acquaintances one makes—the ever-recurring phases of character which are presented. It is worth the price of a season to learn how much of good there may be in a human heart. "Oh, dear," said a merry-hearted girl, "it distresses me so when a little knot of people come and I can't tell the relationship which exists between them; now do you suppose that old gentleman who has a lady on each side of him, is father, or husband, or brother, or some old bachelor uncle, who has taken a good fit and concluded to give a pleasure trip to his cousins or [illegible]?" Well, we are not obliged to wonder long, for they are very frank in telling us that their gentleman friend is an Englishman and a widower, who early lost his helpmeet, and did not see fit, as widowers generally do, to find consolation for his bereavement and solitude in a second wife. Their house had been his home for some six years, and they were unmarried sisters, that you would know, if you were not told, lived in some thriving New-England town or city, and were of good family and the most highly respected of all its respectable people. They had never an excuse to take their travelling, and there one had been very little out of their own little world. So the good man offered to become their escort, and they are to visit Niagara, Lebanon and Sharon, and I know not how many more places, and one could scarcely enjoy some one's self than in seeing them so happy. We wish there were more rich gentlemen, who had the same ideas of pleasure, delicate kindness! Gentlemen are such convenient traveling articles! I heard one lady say she married for no other reason than to obtain a trusty escort, and her of [illegible] the sake of the baggage he was to replenish.

THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

Climate—"British Madeira"—Sea Bathing—Bathing Machines, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

VENTNOR, ISLE OF WIGHT, June, 1855.

Of this invalid retreat on the shores of the Isle of Wight, I will send a brief sketch for the benefit of that class of your readers so seldom addressed except by quack advertisers—so little appreciated except by the regular faculty. I have served too long in the ranks not to sympathize with the weary invalid in our changeable climate, who longs to escape from the extreme heat of our Summer, and the piercing cold of the Winter, to some more congenial air where relief may be found, if not restored health.

Ventnor is a four hours' ride from London, where they are still having, what they term in mild language, "most ungentlemanly weather," it was like jumping from November into May—to the eye, it was like stepping from the gent-up streets of a city into a vast conservatory.

As soon as we had escaped the Solent Sea and landed upon the Isle of Wight, everything burst upon us with the richest luxuriance. Ryde, where the steamers all land passengers, is more a fashionable watering place than any other town upon the Island, and from its exposed situation is not much resorted to by invalids. Being the nearest port to the main land, it is much used for private residences, and is not unlike Staten Island, as seen from the sea, its hill-side studded with beautiful villas, half hid among the dense foliage.

The journey of fourteen miles to Ventnor is made by stage, one of the few routes left in this country where the steam whistle has not drowned the postman's horn, and the regular old English stage-coach flourishes on all its glory.

The coachman with whom I took a seat upon the box, was as ancient and dignified as the "institution" with which he was so proud to be connected. A man of no little importance is this English coachman, with "four in hand," and a bouquet in his button-hole. Every man on the road greets him with a respectful touch of the hat. He is very fond of creating a sensation, and enters the rustic towns with such a flourish of trumpets that I did not much wonder to see the simple people stand in such awe of him. With a loud blast from his horn, and his horses on a full gallop, he would rush through the quiet hamlet, reining up in front of the "Crab and Lobster," which seemed to be a stereotyped sign throughout the island, with a noise that would bring the whole village to the doors, from the babe in arms to the old veterans who looked as if they might have lived on the island before the Conquest. It produced such an impression on me that I was in doubt as to whether we were not an express with important dispatches from the Crimea, instead of a mere coach load of invalids and old ladies, bound for the sea-coast.

But important or not, our arrival and departure were evidently the events of the day in these out of the way places. All business was suspended, and "arms at rest" so long as we remained. Some of the bolder inhabitants would inquire, with a touch of the hat to coachy, if there was "any news from Sebastopol, Sir." I could not but think what a monotonous task the old coachman must have had the past six months in replying to their inquiries each day, "Affairs at Sebastopol remain unchanged." True, there is a variation for him now, and the whole country is making the most glory possible out of it—a dozen flags fly from every flag-staff.

The ride across the island is as beautiful as you can imagine, enough in itself to cure a man of ordinary ills. The rich English farms and meadows, like so many gardens, stretching on either side, bordered with trim hedges of hawthorn, now just bursting into blossom; the green lanes through which we drove, lined with graceful elms, arched over our heads; the thatched cottages of the peasantry, and the turreted castle of "my Lord" mantled with thick covering of ivy which seems here most luxuriant, all presented a scene of quiet beauty and richness, that to my eye, which had been resting on London tiles for two weeks, was most grateful.

I doubt if anything more beautiful than this country life in England at the time of the hawthorn blossom, can be found in any country. This Isl and is called the "Garden of England," and these little invalid resorts upon its southern coast are its choicest parterres. They are the most romantic little hamlets built in among the cliffs, sheltered by high hills from the North and East wind, which are such a curse to England—and exposed only upon the South. The climate is so mild that shrubs and flowers flourish here in the greatest luxuriance. The Magnolia, the Fig tree, and even the Fuschia, growing to great size and hardihood. The houses which are mostly fancy cottages and villas, are perched here and there in retired nooks with winding paths that reach them from the neighboring cliffs. Everything seems done with an eye to the picturesque, and the attempt has been most successful. A scene of wilder beauty can hardly be imagined than is to be found along the coast, from Bonchurch to Ventnor, both communities of invalids; during the Winter months more especially.

The physicians of England have of late years—within twenty years—been in the habit of sending here all their patients with pulmonary diseases, instead of sending them to the south of France, Italy or Madeira; indeed, they have christened Ventnor the "British Madeira." It is becoming more popular every year, and a coast where twenty years ago there was nothing but fishermen's huts, is now being thickly dotted with these little villas, each one assuming some pretentious name. One would think, to see the list of arrivals as published in the Isle of Wight Observer, with the high sounding names of the lodging-houses, that the town was nothing but palaces.

A waiter at the St. Boniface Hotel, thinking I wished to find lodgings for the Winter, invited my attention to his "Villa by the sea," and handed his card—the "Ariosto Villa!" Truly, is not English aristocracy at an ebb when the English waiter is proprietor of a poet's villa!

All the comforts and luxuries an invalid can wish, may be had in this little Paradise. Of the Winter temperature I cannot speak from experience, but if I was to believe one-half that is said in its favor in England, I should expect to live forever, if I passed my Winter here. Several gentlemen have been pointed out to me of aldermanic proportions, who came here feeble invalids two years since; some I was told having gained as much as six inches in that time. So rapidly do they gain in flesh there, that they scorn the slow accumulation by pounds, and gauge them by the inch. I have been told in sober earnest that there was no doubt but I would gain at least three inches if I would pass one Winter here. If the ratio is maintained through coming years, one would soon be obliged to leave this growing community, or would be receiving negotiations from BARNUM for a short season at the American Museum.

There are barracks near here where the raw recruits for her Majesty's service are sent to be fattened up by this favorable climate and Isle of Wight mutton. As a Yankee farmer drives his turkeys into warm quarters and crams them for Thanksgiving, so are these poor fellows kept here and stuffed until they are fat enough to kill, when they are forwarded to meet the Crimean demands. But with this slight difference, there seems little cause for thanksgiving when they are spitted by Russian bayonets, and carved to the Russian cannon! A native of the island who lives near the barracks told me it was amazing how they would fill up from month to month! I should judge another month with a liberal allowance of mutton would hardly put in fighting order the youngsters I see here now. They are feeble looking soldiers, and one remarks, I am told, from the manufacturing towns. I noticed also in London that the soldiers on guard at the Tower and Palace were more striplings. Few of them seem to be over twenty-one. They are literally "short boys" who have entered the service under the "reduced standard."

This is a recruiting station in more than one sense. There are several invalid officers here who have left a leg or an arm on the Crimean battle-fields, and returning with a large amount of glory, but precious little life to sustain their honors so dearly bought, hope to recruit a broken constitution by a season at this British Madeira. They excite a world of sympathy, as they are wheeled along the Esplanade in Bath chairs. The ladies seem ready to wearship them, and one is almost tempted to assume a white bandage and Bath chair, to be the idol of so many bright eyes, and to receive such delicate attentions. But I did not feel at all ambitious to assume the shattered limbs to gain the sympathy and attention, even if the glory were thrown in, and the "Crimean Medal" tied to my button-hole.

Although it seems on this extreme point of the Island like the jumping-off place of creation, and as if no news could ever reach us, yet there is one branch of news which we get in advance of the London Times. There is a station of "Lloyd's" perched on one of the highest cliffs of this coast, where a man is constantly on the lookout to take signals of vessels inward or outward bound, and telegraph them to Lloyd's Exchange, in London. His powerful glass sweeps the horizon, showing up everything between us and the French coast, which is visible to the naked eye in clear weather. Where I see but a profuse sprinkling of flags flying from the rigging of a passing ship, he from his signal book will read the announcement of such a vessel "from the Black Sea with invalids, bound for Portsmouth," her time out, and particulars enough for an important item in next morning's Times. All the men-of-war, transports, and the fleet of gunboats now going out as fast as they can be rigged, pass under our inspection. It much relieves the monotony of this quiet life, and makes one feel quite in the society of the world to listen to this conversation carried on between the many colored streamers flying from Lloyd's flagstaff over my heads and the ships of all nations which may pass between us and the horizon.

The cliffs in some places along the coast rise perpendicularly to the height of two hundred feet, and yet there is at some points a gradual slope leading to a fine beach, where bathing cars are furnished and houses provided with warm baths for invalids. The season for bathing seems much earlier than with us; the water has been warm enough all the month of June for sure bathing.

The surface of the country is so uneven here that the invalids take their exercise mostly on donkeys, and it is quite a picturesque scene to see a party of ladies with their straw hats and plumes, mounted on these little animals threading the narrow paths upon the cliffs which overlook the sea, or climbing up the winding way to the heights of "St. Boniface," a steep hill which rises abruptly about 500 feet behind the town,—much pleasanter to witness than to attempt, as I found to my great annoyance. Although the services of a "professed donkey driver" were secured to urge his donkeyship up the hill, I was obliged to seize my opportunity and get off and walk.

I soon found, too, that "distance lent enchantment" to the pretty group of riders I had so much admired. Upon a near approach I was shocked to see under those graceful, coquettish hats, which with us are a sure promise of a youthful, if not a pretty face, the lengthened visage of maidens who had passed the tender age of youth, (if they had ever seen it,) and those streamers and plumes waved before the spectacled eyes of matrons who must have lived their full of sixty years.

Punch had a good take-off upon this costume a short time since. One of these pretty flats seen promenading, and two young bloods in rapid pursuit, one saying to the other, "I say, Charley, here's that pretty hat and feather; we'll have a sight now." But lo! the pretty flat crowned the head of a figure already half passed into the mummied state.

The "Undercliff," as it is called, upon which most of these little towns are built, is a portion of a landslide which occurred many years since. It extended for many miles, and the richest part of the Island is the soil of this Undercliff. At intervals along the coast are deep fissures in the cliff made by running water, which are called "chines." In some places where the stream of water is large, and the sides of the ravine are wooded, the view is very wild, as the fall of water is often five hundred feet, and it has been wearing away for years.

These "chines" are much visited by travelers who are doing the Island, and read in their guide-book that such scenes of "savage magnificence" and "combinations of congenial horrors" are to be found on no other coast. But like many other wonders of nature, they have been sketched and painted by artists with imaginations so powerful that after admiring the sketch you are disappointed in the reality. The every-day scenery of the Isle of Wight cannot be surpassed for quiet beauty. It is a winning scenery that gains upon you until you are loth to exchange it for these extra attractions upon which they lavish all their superlatives. These will do for tourists who prize most highly scenes most difficult to see, and have a partiality for descending perpendicular cliffs. But invalids are content to pass them by; I was satisfied after one experiment that they were but "second class" scenery.

The Island is rich in old castles and ruins, and the Queen has a fine Palace at Osborn, built on a site selected by Prince ALBERT, and after his own plans. It is quite a pet palace, I believe, and the only one not thrown open to visitors. As easily and princely as it is in outward appearance, it is quite surpassed in beauty as seen from the water by a castle adjoining it, belonging to BELL, of the Weekly Messenger. It is on a more prominent spot with grounds sloping to the sea, and its gray old towers and turrets mantled with ivy, attract every eye more favorably than Osborn Castle with its yellowish front and spindling towers at either end.

The Queen is chronicled to remove to Osborn for a stay before the Paris tour. PEREGRINE.

Normal Musical Institute at New-London, Conn.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The Annual Examination of this Institution took place on the 10th, 11th and 12th days of July. The Primary Department occupied the first day. On the second, the higher classes in the various branches of English education, and the classes in French and German, were examined. The Musical Department occupied the third day, and a Vocal and Instrumental Concert in the evening, closed the exercises.

This School, under the charge of Mrs. JOHN T. MARTINER, occupies the building which will be recognized by its old name—"Federal-street House." Large trees enhance its otherwise pleasant location.

The examination was creditable alike to pupils and to teachers. At its close, several of the auditors came and expressed their satisfaction. There seemed to be but one opinion.

The Musical Department deserves particular mention. The pupils answered the questions with promptness and accuracy. The system is very thorough.

The Concert was held in the old dining-hall. It was filled to overflowing, and the passages and other rooms and the grounds were partially occupied. From three to four hundred persons were in attendance.

There were nineteen pieces performed. The accompaniment consisted of pianos and an organ. The most noticeable piece was the "Overture to Tancredi," executed by twelve performers. "Fantasia on Gujus Animam," "Tremole," and "Carnival of Venice," were among the other pieces. The Concert gave general satisfaction, judging by the applause. E. W.

Visit to the Sistine Chapel at Rome—The Religious Ceremonies.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

ROME, Italy, Monday, June 18, 1855.

Sunday, the 17th of June, was a remarkably pleasant and warm day for Rome, and, rising betimes, as our apartments are some distance from the Vatican, where the ceremonies commence early, we made an elaborate toilet, and stopping in the Corso for a pair of white kids—without which it is about as easy to entice a camel through the eye of a very fine cambric needle, as for a stranger to gain admittance to the Sistine Chapel, when there he ceremonies there—my friend MATTEO and I perambulated over the Tiber, and through a long, hot and dusty street, to gigantic St. Peter's Church, adjoining which, as you know, is the "Vatican," the Winter residence of the Pope, and where they have "meeting" every Sunday.

At the foot of the long stair-case we were brought to a stand by the Swiss Guard, the private guard of His Holiness, who assured us that as in our innocence we were without dress coats—although in every other respect costumed as the law directs—we would not be admitted, but after a little expostulation they allowed us to proceed, with the admonition (which threw us into a mild perspiration,) that we had better not attempt it. With Yankee perseverance, however, we determined not to retire from the enemy at the first broadside, and particularly as we had come so far to witness this great "doin';" therefore, placing great confidence in our white gloves and cravats, the ends of which latter we pulled out in an alarming manner—so as to make the greatest show possible—and putting on my spectacles, which looks professor-like, you know, we hurried up the magnificent stair-case.

Arriving at the top, and entering the portico and hall—elegantly dressed in tapestries and paintings, in honor of the Festa day—we came plump upon another detachment of the redoubtable Swiss Guards, who, collected about the heavy curtained entrance to the chapel, with upraised halberts and gigantic moustaches, absolutely denied admittance to all gentlemen sans white gloves, black pants and dress coats—all ladies without black robes and veils—and all dogs and ragamuffins generally. This, of course, threw us directly into cold perspiration number two; and seeing an old gentleman sent away for being in a frock coat, as we were, and a lady, who, singularly enough, endeavored in vain to persuade the Guard to allow her to pass, accoutred, as she was, in a monstrous white crape shawl, with a border of pink roses, we feared it was all over with us. Invention is certainly the offspring of necessity, and the proverb was never better exemplified than, when, having retired from the main hall, MATTEO taking the pins from his immaculate cravat, (thereby sacrificing his peace of mind and body for the remainder of the day,) proceeded to pin up the two front corners of my frock coat; I performed the same kind office for him, (having destroyed my peace of mind and body in a similar manner,) and armed with these temporary dress coats, we returned to the assault. Now, understand—it is no joking matter, this deceiving of the guards, for they are very severe in their regulations, not to say ferocious, and in the Pope's own apartments—in this huge ante-room, filled with soldiers, servants, cardinals and officials, collected mysteriously together, awaiting the advent of the Representative of St. Peter himself, not a word being spoken—it was rather delicate business. However, MATTEO got in, but my deception was too apparent, and the burly guard laying his huge gloved hand upon my shoulder pulled me back, and pointing to my unlucky coat, intimated that my vestito was not according to CHESTERFIELD. Cold perspiration number three; and while considering my next move, MATTEO came back to ascertain the cause of my delay, when he too was espied by the lynx-eyed official, and we were both ordered out "instanter." At this unfortunate moment the Captain of the Guard, (an old fellow perhaps three-quarters blind,) came up at hearing the dispute, and scowling at the poor underguard, who was doing but his duty, motioned us to enter, and observed to his serf that "Certainly these gentlemen are properly dressed,—can't you see?" So in we marched.

It would exhaust too much ink and paper to tell you how we passed between two ranks of military, handsomely dressed and decorated; how we were stationed like a flock of sheep in a sort of pen appropriated to strangers, from which about half of us could see what was passing in the splendid and high vaulted church; how we were huddled together in a painfully upright position; how we waited nearly an hour before anything amusing or interesting occurred; how we tried meanwhile to admire the tremendous chef d'œuvre of MICHAEL ANGELO, "The Last Judgment," frescoed upon the wall behind the silver altar, and so thrown into shade by distance, the dim light which struggled through the curtained windows, and the forever frankincensed atmosphere, that I did not appreciate it as I have since done; how we nearly dislocated our necks in agonizing attempts to enjoy the splendid and powerful paintings upon the roof, also by the "Great ANGELO;" how by these singular and unaccustomed gyrations of the neck, my collar, as I anticipated, bereft of its fastenings, which were doing such signal service in my coat tails, became so painfully emulous of the high white ruffle of the Captain of the Swiss Guard, that if it had not been for two or three vivacious fleas who were underneath my stockings, and who were perambulating up and down, from ankle to knee—thus diverting and dividing my attention—I don't know what I should have done; how, after awhile, we, (the aforesaid domestic animals,) stared at one another as if we had been wax curiosities; and how, finally, to our great relief, came the Swiss Guard, marching proudly in advance of a disjointed procession of heavy Cardinals, enveloped in long scarlet gowns, the trains of each of which were borne by two fat purple attendants, like blackberry dumplings; how they all ambled gravely up the nave, and having made obeisance to eight huge wax candles, seated themselves in a large square about the altar, with their purple servants at their feet, and fell directly asleep, awaking only when one of their august associates came, when they arose seriously and welcomed him. Finally, a tremendous burst of music from the Pope's choristers—who were in a little cage at the side of the church—awoke and disturbed the somnolent cardinals, and startled us from our peaceful flea speculations. With straining eyes and upon tiptoe we saw the good looking old Pope foot in from a side door, amidst a perfect shoal of yellow gowns, purple gowns, white gowns and scarlet gowns; colored silks, colored candles, colored officials, and colored little boys with bells, and all half indistinct like an exhibition of fireworks, with colored frankincense. His Holiness, with an agreeable and pleasant face, though sleepy withal, having inclined before the altar, passed to his throne at one side, and seating himself, the Mass commenced, which, however, is similar to the forms of the Roman churches in America. It was distressing enough to stand and listen to the whole of it, and when it was all over, when Pius had swum out again in his ocean of soldiers, servants, chamberlains and canons; when the heavy old scarlet cardinals with their blackberry dumplings had ambled out, we emerged from our isle "fairly pressing," fatigued and warm. How, every lemonade and a chocolate cake at Wagner's soon restored us to our usual vigor, and we congratulated ourselves that we had attended High Mass at the Sistine Chapel.

In a few days we are to have the celebration of the famous "Corpus Domini," one of the fêtes in the Roman Catholic Church, on account of which I may send you. At present farewell.

Yours truly, S. W. G.

Male Liquors.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

We cordially agree with "S." in the TIMES of the 16th instant, "that the merits (or demerits) of Beer are worth consideration, and ought to be understood." The question of incomes, almost universal intelligence in interesting beverages is before the public, and the innumerable varieties here all their advocates. I would venture to premise, that there is not a Prohibitionist who would, by law or otherwise, interfere with the right of any man drinking what he pleases. But the Prohibitionist insists that no drinker may make himself a nuisance with drinking, nor may any maker or vendor make a nuisance of his liquor by its exposure as a temptation. Drinking, within the last fifty years, has become the monstrous vice of society, instead of individual crime, and must be checked. Those who would be free from its horrors are swept into the vortex, and the whole are taxed, demoralized, shamed and victimized. We have good reason to believe that Ale is the most pernicious of all intoxicating drinks, and are anxious to examine, with "S." or any one, whether "the subject (Ale) has the merit of moderation, at all events, which is a virtuous one in these days." There are men engaged in the making, vending and using, who are otherwise our most estimable citizens, and we cannot behold, without the greatest intense feelings of pain and sympathy, these victims to a legal, fashionable, creditable, profitable trade, which has grown up in our midst. On this subject I would wish to speak.

The writer first quotes medical authority for the drinking of ale. If the writer does not know, we do, that the brewers have not only with ale, but with fees of large sums of money, suborned "medical writers of standing" to vouch for the merits of their deleterious potations, and the public can judge of the value of such medical authority, while it points significantly at the labored opinions of old and grave jurists on the Prohibitory Law, produced by the same two stimulants. Ale or beer, says the writer, "takes a middle ground between the extreme prohibitionist and the extreme anti-liquor-man." What place is this? Is it between schiedam schnapps and brandy? We know, and every good man knows, the position that ale stands in to destruction. This multipotent compound of malt and hops and alcohol, is the school master of drunkenness, and initiates man into all the mysteries of disease and crime. Its first distasteful bitter but sure provoker to repetition. Its dreamy forgetfulness for a time of every duty and care. Its allurements to its haunts and indulgence. Its beastly and satanic tendencies. Its foul and horrible consequences on the mechanic and laborer. Its intoxicating insanity, sloth, melancholy, confused memory, delirium, and a death of blasphemy. We have heard of statutes licensing moral men to keep ale-houses. Who ever heard of a moral ale-house? Moral obscenity and blasphemy!! Ale-houses are the Bohon Upasses of Christendom, which poison all within the circle of their influence. Whose precincts are wet with the tears and blood of the helpless and innocent, and whose confines are the mausoleums of immortal souls. Ale, if time permitted, we would give its chemical analysis, and dare the physician or moralist to recommend it.

This writer then talks learnedly of the antiquity of ale, cites HERODOTUS, INO of Wessex, John Barleycorn, Magna Charter, &c., &c. His researches and scholarship did not rise to TOOKE'S Pantheon, and to prior antiquities, or he might have given us the name, parentage and education of the first brewer.

The amazing proportions of malt liquors are the Syren's song that entrances and bewilders the brewer, robs them of their reason and humanity, and sends them the destroyers of the food of their fellow-beings, and to fill the world with crime, want and woe. Is it any surprise that poor Ireland is so oppressed, so demoralized? The best historians proclaim this melancholy fact. The brewer proudly parades the twelve million bushels of barley, worth, in the grain, probably nine millions of dollars; when tortured into ale, &c., the Irishman pays over eighteen millions of dollars for them.

Let us examine this Irish beer business, and that we may be understood by the brewers, who scarcely any of them have a chemical knowledge of their trade, we will at this time use their commonest terms, (but we are ready to enter the list with their best man,) and in the statements we will give our estimate within bounds to their advantage. We will suppose 2½ bushels of barley weighing 48 pounds are 120 pounds, (this would make about 78 pounds barley meal,) and this amount of barley makes one barrel of ale. The loss by malting and mashing will be 46 pounds, leaving 32 pounds of extractive matter, by SOUTHWORTH'S saccharometer, per barrel. (DRING & FAYE'S, or RICHARDSON'S are, however, the correct instruments.) This extractive matter, or worts, are then fermented, by which the fibrine and gluten are mostly thrown out in yeast, and the saccharine reduced to 7 pounds the barrel, by the loss of carbonic acid and formation of alcohol in the process of fermentation. Of the 78 pounds of barley meal there remain then only 7 pounds, principally saccharine, and of this it is seldom that there is one pound of gluten or fibrine left to the barrel. Ale or beer will not average one pound of nutriment, so that 77 pounds must be destroyed that brewers may realize fortunes beyond the dreams of avarice.

Our friend "S." says truly that the importance of the beer business of New-York is worth consideration.—744 breweries and 319 distilleries. No wonder the meal and flour are high, and that there is need of 744 State prisons, jails, penitentiaries, poor-houses, watch-houses, court-houses and lawyers' offices, &c., and that the 319 distilleries may well double our taxes.

We should like to examine with "S.," GERARD'S and KITCHENER'S ideas. There wants light on this subject. Then let friend "S." bring his cooks and all his paid, or drunken doctors' recommendations of beer. Let the public decide on them now. There are very important facts which we are prepared to bring forward to sustain to the letter all we have said of beer and brewing in this article.

The Brigadier Generalship of Gen. Shields.

MONDAY, July 16, 1855.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The following I cut from your issue of the 9th instant, being a portion of a Washington letter, signed "Aqueday."

"Now, more than one of the army officers who look upon the field appointments as made only for them and not for the service or the country, have intimated that if Gen. SHIELDS, or any other civilian, should be so unwitty as to step between them and this promotion, he would be instantly summoned to a field of private combat."

"This promotion" refers to the new Brigadier-General, who is not, and will not be appointed till after December next. Permit me to say that to me, at least, the object of the assertion is apparent; and further, to declare my belief that it lacks one essential ingredient—truth. I take Mr. Aqueday to be one who may be willing to accompany this charge, (for such it is in fact, and doubtless is intended,) with proof, and that is what is now requested. This assertion is unqualified, definite as to fact, but indefinite as to persons, and so free it from all appearance of being gentlemanly. I hope he will just state one or two, if no more, of those army officers who, on this particular ground, have [illegible]

[illegible] Mr. Aqueday, for not being satisfied with the simple [illegible] I think, what you have said is not [illegible] the army [illegible] is unjust till proven to be what is [illegible]. Indeed, unless you offer something more satisfactory, [illegible] will be but the more confirmed in the construction which they have without much hesitation placed upon it.

Why Gen. SHIELDS (or some one else) has not heretofore been appointed, is best known to the Department, which knows pretty well how to manage its own affairs. I know that he has many warm friends in the Army who would hail his promotion with delight. I would be glad to see him get it, but at the same time it is very bad policy to ask the public sympathy in his favor at the expense of truth. Do not hide your light, Mr. Aqueday, under a bushel, but as a matter of satisfaction, and prevent other throats, let us know who are those officers who, with commissions dating scores of years back, so willing to dispatch civilians in general, and Gen. SHIELDS in particular. To me it looks like a bit of fancywork. OSWEGO.

Political Meeting at Platte City.

From the St. Louis Republican, July 14.

The Weston Reporter devotes a column and a half to the description of a recent political meeting in Platte County. It was called, ostensibly, to send delegates to the Convention at Lexington, but it is charged that the real design was to instruct the members of the Legislature from that County to vote for ATCHISON—one of them, at least, JOHN DONIPHAN, being a Whig, and having voted as a Whig for his namesake, in all the ballots given at the last session of that body. It was with a view of controlling his vote, and of giving occasion to other counties to make a like movement, that these proceedings were had, in connection with the other object. But there was an entire want of success, and the expedient will hardly be resorted to again.

The meeting was organized about 2 P. M., by electing Col. WM. H. SWEARENGEN to the Chair, J. W. VINEYARD and ROBERT CAIN, Vice-Presidents, and THOMAS STEARNES, Secretary. Judge ALMOND stated the purpose of the meeting, and moved the appointment of a Committee of two from every township in the County, to draft a preamble and resolutions. In their absence the meeting was addressed by Major JAMES MORIN, Atchison Democrat, PETER T. ABRAM and JOHN WRIGHT, Whigs. A rich debate was kept up until the report of the Committee was received, and then a still more animated discussion took place. The resolutions were, with two exceptions, entirely acceptable to the whole meeting, but there was a regular fight over these two—the first and the last. The first resolution proposed a fusion of the Whig and Democratic parties, and, this being accomplished, the last resolution went to the extent of instructing the representatives from that County to vote for a particular individual. The parties were very shy how they spooned with the first resolution, and they did not come to a vote without a good deal of maneuvering. When, however, the vote was taken, the friends of ATCHISON were surprised to find that the Whigs were in the majority, and the resolution was virtually abandoned.

There was, after this, no difficulty in securing the adoption of the preamble and resolutions, with the exception of the last. This resolution contained a blank, it being the intention that it should be filled with the name of ATCHISON. A friend of DONIPHAN moved to fill that blank with his name, and it was carried. Then it was discovered that the resolution had no business there, and it was stricken out! This disposition of the proposition was satisfactory to the Whigs, who did not care about instructing Democrats to vote for DONIPHAN; and so the resolutions were passed, the head and tail having been cut off.

The friends of DONIPHAN, at this meeting, acted with good sense and a proper regard for the gentleman who is in nomination by them for the Senate. No substantial reason has yet been given why he should be dropped or overslaughed, and the Whigs should rebuke every effort of this kind. If DONIPHAN cannot be elected, no one else can, and it is the duty of the Whig party, in and out of the Legislature, to stand by him to the last. He is well worthy of a place in the Senate, and if the Whigs hold on to him he will be triumphant. SEVTON cannot be elected nor can ATCHISON be; and such is DONIPHAN's position—so well does he stand with both factions—that the friends of either would vote for him before they would contribute to the election of either of the rival candidates.

Another Outrage—Methodist Preachers Mobbed by Atchison and Stringfellow Ruffians.

To the Editors of the Chicago Democratic Press:

I hasten to inform you of another mob in Platte County. The Methodist Church North had an appointment for quarterly meeting near Forley. The presiding elder, preachers and congregation had assembled and concluded the morning service, and were proceeding, when a mob of about eighty armed men made their appearance. The congregation, it being warm, were seated in the shade in front of the house, and the preachers were inside. When Dr. WALKER led the mob to the door, where Rev. Mr. MORRIS was preaching, and seizing him, Mr. MORRIS drew his revolver and cocked it, when some one caught his arm and took it from him. The mob then rushed on him, yelling, "Hang him! shoot him!" Some in the congregation interceded for him, and after a long parley they consented to let him go, under a pledge to leave and not preach any more till they gave him permission. The rest of the preachers escaped during the disturbance, and the congregation broke up and dispersed. The preachers were all armed with revolvers. They are aware of the threats daily made against them. The mob brought tar and feathers and hemp along with them. The excitement is great. These humble and pious ministers of religion will be driven out, and utter lawlessness prevail.

In haste, THATCHER.

PLATTE COUNTY, MO., June 28, 1855.

An Avalanche of Bread.

From the Atlanta (Ga.) Intelligencer, 13th inst.

Yesterday there were one hundred cars loaded with (new) wheat at Chattanooga, ready to move, and the depôt crammed to its utmost capacity. Two trains a day arrive at Chattanooga, by the Nashville road, and it was estimated yesterday that there were stored in that town 20,000 bushels of wheat, exclusive of that in store by our road. From Chattanooga down to Etowah, the depôts are all full to bursting. On the 9th there were received at Calhoun 2,000 bushels, and the hands could not knock off their loading till 11 o'clock at night. Major YOUNG, the agent of Calhoun, thinks that from his depôt alone, he will ship 100,000 bushels during the season. To-day five full trains will be down, and we suppose each car will contain 130 sacks. The rush of this description of freight has been unprecedented, caused, as we learn, by the offer of the New-York millers to give $1 25 for all wheat delivered at depôt by the 10th, and at Charleston and Savannah by the 15th of this month. We fear, in vain, of this state of things, that much litigation and loss must be met by some parties. The crop, under the strong inducements of this favorable state of the market, was reaped at a earlier stage of ripeness, and then, in a wet spell, got out and pressed forward in large bulks into depôts. This will inevitably heat, and to a great extent suffer deterioration. Then, we have no doubt, as the State road is looked upon as fair game for all the world to hawk at, that thousands of dollars in the way of reclamation will be brought against it to make good this damage. We learn that already the Tennesseeans are threatening to sue for losses growing out of the detention of their grain for a few days.

BRUTAL OUTRAGE ON A VERY YOUNG GIRL.—We learn from a reliable source, that a rape of a most brutal character was committed by an Irishman on the person of a young girl about 13 years of age, at Pocatonico, on the 6th inst. The girl was the daughter of a farmer by the name of WILLIAMSON, and it appears had innocently consented to attend an anniversary ball with him, to be held at Pocatonico, notwithstanding he was almost a stranger to her. On the afternoon of that day, he hired a horse and buggy of Mr. HILL, the landlord of the Pocatonico Hotel, drove out to her residence, about three miles from town, took her in, and on his return when about a mile and a half from Pocatonico, turned into the timber, and there committed the horrid outrage, bruising and maltreating her in a shocking manner, and leaving her to pass the night in the woods, in the most wretched and forlorn condition. When discovered, the girl was perfectly helpless and speechless.

The wretch then ran away with the team, was traced to Dover, where he turned out the horse with a drove of young horses—leaving the wagon in the bushes—and it is thought took the cars south from that point. Officers are still in pursuit of him, and it is to be hoped for humanity's sake, their efforts to capture the ruffian will not be in vain.

THE PANAMA RAILROAD COMPANY.

[illegible] of your President, Directors and their friends, in the Tribune of the 28th June, [illegible] Committees.

In the Proceedings of the Freight Hall Stockholdery Over-[illegible]

If we now 27 days since you assembled on this [illegible], and by adjournment, to act upon the reports, from two of your Committees, made by them, at your meeting of the 20th June.

A false retrospect has doubtless been taken by you all, and especially by those present, of the proceedings of that meeting; there have been published in most, if not all, the journals of the day; your President, Vice-President, and Secretary have issued pamphlets criticising them, and the Chairman of your first Committee has responded to the attack of your President and Directors, upon that Committee in the Weekly Post, of the 21 inst., and in a manner, (which as one of that Committee,) I take this opportunity of saying, meets my concurrence, in what they of the large and influential interests he represents, is entitled to promote their and our common interests, and prove that the gentleman [illegible] his own self-respect, when in a hurried moment (as "Chairman" of said Committee,) he was made the instrument by your President and Directors of leading the meeting of the 20th June, from the proceedings of the prior meeting, (first presented to your consideration, and by Parliamentary rule, the primary subject for consideration,) and thus inducing the minority to join in the harmonious resolutions, which were so earnestly passed, then the carefully prepared statement of your President, in answer to and smashing the reports, was introduced, plainly showing the design of those resolutions, as no sooner passed and assented to by all, then the reports were made the object of attack by the President and Directors, in the President's written statement, reiterated by relatives of the President and others, backed by an honorable gentleman.

The plan of throwing both reports of your Committees under the table was abandoned; in lieu the courtesy of laying the first report of your Committee upon the table was adopted; the second report of your Committee shared the fate first named, it being the peculiar and favorite object of the attack of your President, Directors and their followers; its defence fairly and legitimately devolves upon its Chairman, especially as he is the recognized author, except so far as the pruning and modification of it, by each and every member of the second Committee, and their adoption of it as printed, make the report theirs.

I shall not shrink from the task imposed; my only regret is, that it leads into the arena of public discussion, with tastes, inclinations and habits averse to it.

The minority, however, have not brought the subject before the public eye; the majority have. If you revert to your October assemblage in South-street, to that of same month in Wall-street, to that of June 20 in South-street, and again on June 28, in Wall-street, (at all of which I believe reporters were present,) but especially to the public journals of the day, you will see that the executive power of your Company, have invoked the public eye, though, be it remembered, that the minority were the first to urge and insist upon annual or semi-annual meetings of your Stockholders, which were never had from the organization of the Company to October, 1854, then for the first time resolved on, though in contravention of the resolution of that meeting; and at the close of your last gathering, it was proposed, that your adjournment be sine die, and without discontinuts, acquiesced in.

I congratulate you that public sentiment is invoked, though until your last meeting, the propriety of it might be questioned. In support of the right, it is a sentiment unswayed and unawed by power, and will strengthen the minority in opposing a policy, on the part of your Corporation, in which the public have a deep and abiding interest, and in which they may exert a potential influence, for good, to your property.

The great principle the minority contend for is one of "equality in prices," and to which all commercial transactions approximate, or find a common end a general level.

Look around and witness its application in the leading departments of trade. Take for instance your marine insurance companies; do they not have a tariff of premiums?

The fire insurance companies; do they not also have a tariff of rates? The railroads; do they not have a tariff of prices that assimilate, where parallel lines open to a common traffic?

The banks, (though the law interposes as with railroads, in fixing a maximum rate,) yet are they not somewhat governed by principles that recognize a species of equality?

The steamships, packet ships and coasters, crossing the Atlantic, and lining our coasts, are they not managed, guided and governed in some respects, by this principle?

Select the smallest and the largest commercial man, whether in foreign or domestic trade, is there not an equality, not perhaps admitted and recognized between the two, but in reality at the basis of their every-day transactions?

But for this equality, acted on and known, where would be those safeguards and restraints, which in the active and unkind competition of our commercial and trading community, are more potent than laws or their makers? and what would be the effect of breaking down this barrier? It need not be answered, for your mind, like my own, will shrink from its portraiture.

Let the sequel show whether our President and five Directors, (one retiring eight months since,) and who have wielded the destinies of your corporation from its early organization down to the present hour, have not acted upon that antagonistic principle of warring against property, and not in name, but in fact against the individuals who owned it, and who may have dared to send their steamers on the Pacific, as on the Atlantic Ocean, to share its risks and in its traffic prices. Equality in commercial transactions is a sounder doctrine, and a wholesome and active competition best illustrates it.

The principle of it is higher, and is compassed in the "live and let live" policy, which should control as all, in those many jarring interests of business and the other varied relations that exist between man and his fellow-man. The history of your Corporation for three years past best illustrates its pecuniary disadvantages.

With these general considerations, which are submitted to your calm reflection and consideration, allow me to ask your attention to the specific objects of this communication; and

1. The President's written attack upon the second Committee's report.

Before remarking upon it, it is necessary to revert to that report, and weigh and digest its substance.

Upon the first ten and a half pages of the second report, your Committee detail the course of their negotiation with the Nicaragua Company, embracing several letters between your President and the Committee; and a reference thereto will best explain the views entertained. The most casual reader will observe that your Committee, as between the two corporate bodies, were placed as it were between the upper and nether mill stones; on the part of the Nicaragua Company, by their managers assuming an irreasonable position, viz.: that, as a condition precedent to a negotiation the $12,000 due them must be first paid up. On the part of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, by their managers holding on to the $12,000 due the other Company, claiming there was an offset, while your Committee regarded the Nicaragua Company as good for the small, as they were good for the larger item claimed, and it mattered little whether it was $56,000 or $66,000, that might in the future become necessary to sue for.

Beside, between the 20th May, the date of the conference with the executive head of your Corporation, and the 20th June, the date of the presentation of your Committee's report to you, despite the personal repeated assurances on the part of your President, and the President's written one to your Committee, dated June 12, on the thirty-seventh page of reports, that he would seek to arrange this matter of $12,000 with the chief manager of the Nicaragua Company, the majority of your Committee gradually, reluctantly, and at the last hour, came to the conclusion that, from some unexplainable cause, your President was determined to make this $12,000 the stumbling block to a negotiation, and was sustained thereby by his Directors.

Whether to promote your interest, or from outside influences undivulged, you, and best determine; certain it is that your immediate interest was disregarded by your President, in creating this state of matters between the corporations, and with the authority of your second Committee, was extent, no doubt, from your President and Directors, that the $12,000 should be made the pivot on which should hinge the fate of your second Committee's report, and the reduction on the company may be fairly stated at about $200,000; while the company's ships were made free from San Francisco at a large reduction, and all negotiation for harmony between the two lines suspended, upon the wave grasping of $12,000 as an offset to disputed claims of $66,000, of which $50,000 was alleged damages.

Your Committee's report intended to, and did, leave it to the wisdom of your body to judge whether the payment of the $12,000 should be made.

Whether by so doing the Committee adopted a "fallacy," or whether their statements and suggestions were "crude" on this subject, must stands be decided by your impartial and final judgment.

Your President says, "We (the Company) have no wish to go into details." It will be well, however, if stockholders investigate the figures found on pages 19 and 21 of the first report, as exhibiting an aggregate reduction in fares, from the competition with the Nicaragua Company, of $1,901,606 36, during 1852-54, and four months of 1855, before they condemn the recommendations made to your President and Direction by the Committee to pay this $12,000 to the Nicaragua Company, or before you decide that the action of the second Committee was, in the words of your President, "calculated to insult your property, injure your interests, or deprive you of that power of executive organization essential to the vitality of your Company;" and it would be well also in considering these figures and facts, to keep steadily and steadfastly in view the warning of your President, viz.: "A theory may be true or false, and however you bolster false theories by statistics, practice will stamp their value."

But after the facts and figures in the first report are weighed by you, and carefully considered—if your conclusions shall be that you have thrown away $1,900,000 in competition, beside the small money, and after imposing your capital at one time to the extent of $400,000, and now to $146,915 40, there may be momentary consolation in the reflection that your President thus continues:

"Experience and wisdom both teach us that fair remunerating rates of passage are the best." Whether the influence of the minority in this matter of opposition, in arraying the facts and figures in your Committee's first report, have had any influence, it would be invidious for them to say, but it is your province to determine, bearing in mind, however, that your President persists in saying "that it is puerile to assert that you have lost a large amount of money because your directors did not exact high rates in spite of circumstances which they did not control."

I approach now the subject of the Panama Railroad Company, and the negotiation opened by your second Committee, with that corporate body, and embraced in the last three pages of the second report.

Before canvassing the attack of your President, let us examine the course of your Committee.

With the sanction of your President, most cordially given, they opened a negotiation with two gentlemen, directors of that road, and duly empowered, discussed in a friendly way the rate of fare charged, viz.: $25 (for forty-eight miles) for each passenger, allowing one hundred pounds of baggage free of charge, and urged considerations which should influence, in their judgment, a reduction in price.

The President of the Panama Railroad Company assured the Committee that the subject claimed the most serious consideration of himself and the Board of Directors, and that he hoped to submit the final decision to your Committee on or before your adjourned meeting of the 20th June.

Seeing that no such decision was made, your Committee dwelt upon the subject in their report, reminded you that our steamships furnished at least three-fourths, and perhaps seven-eighths of the whole passenger business to the Panama road, that the fare was sixteen times greater than the maximum rate on some few exceptional roads in the United States, (while the cost of the Panama road was but double some of these,) its capital was largely productive, (a late dividend of six per cent for six months, in its undeveloped state, illustrates it,) that the whole burden of competition, with a rival route composed in part of inter-oceanic transit, was thrown on steamship interest, and in fact, for two years, not only were stockholders of steamships without dividends, but their capital had been and was now impaired. Your Committee, though without any proposition from the Panama Railroad Company, persisted in harboring the belief that the equity of a reduction in fares, and a pro rata division of them between steamship lines, would commend itself to the Board of Directors of the Panama road, and they reminded you that a majority of your Board of Directors had a seat in the Panama Railroad direction, and that there was a remedy for the $25 per head, if the charge was persisted in, which remedy, they trusted, you would not be forced to resort to.

It will be remembered, however, that the following recommendation was made by your Committee, and with a view to secure the harmonious cooperation of all, on a point of serious importance to your revenues, "Your Committee recommend that this negotiation with the Panama Railroad Company should be continued by your Board of Directors, (Pacific Mail Steamship Company,) with a view promptly to make an equitable arrangement with the Panama Railroad Company, and, if unsuccessful, reassembling stockholders (of Pacific Mail Steamship Company) to reconsider it."

Did your Committee do wrong in opening a negotiation with the Panama Railroad Company?

Your President approved it, and one of the Directors urged more than once the necessity of a reduction in the $25, just prior to the return of your President from San Francisco, to a member of this Committee.

Did your Committee err in giving you their reasons for asking an abatement from the Panama Railroad Company?

As your limited agents, they were bound to give you as their principals, the reasons on which they had claimed a reduction, and to show their faithfulness in the discharge of the trust, which, unsolicited, you had reposed in them, which, in good faith, they had prosecuted.

Did your Committee err in pointing out to you a mode of escaping the demand of $25 per head, which they deemed unreasonable?

It originated in the conviction that injustice was done the steamship interested in its relations with the Panama road. Their judgment, you may decide, was faulty, but reconsideration of the subject confirms it and leaves it unchanged.

They could not partake in the sentiment of several stockholders in the Panama Railroad, openly avowed that the true policy of your Company was to break down the Nicaragua Company, force them to abandon that route, and transfer themselves to the Panama route, giving the whole California travel to it, instead of the half, and increasing the travel from about 16,000 to 20,000 people per year now, to about 36,000 to 40,000, if the whole travel were diverted to the Panama route, and, of course, doubling the number who might pay $25 per head; or, in other words, increasing gross receipts of Panama Railroad from $450,000 to $900,000 annually.

Your Committee represented the Steamship Company's interest; the past history and policy of this Company was before them; they could see no object in adhering to it, even though under this stimulus, it might present in the future the alluring prospect to the Panama Railroad of concentrating the entire 36,000 to 40,000 annually over the Panama route, while the steamship interest was wading through another period of three years without dividends, at 7 per cent. interest, already equal to about $500,000 on your capital.

Beside, your Committee looked only to the steamship interest, but as they maintain with none other than liberal views toward the railroad interest, views best estimated by a reference to their report.

They knew that the powerful influence of the Panama Railroad was invoked in various ways, in joining in this controversy between steamship lines, and though in tracing out the causes they were obvious, yet it only showed the potency of the influence that prevailed, even where conservatism might have pointed out that it was better for that capital, with reference to the future, to keep aloof from the present disagreement between the steamship properties and their managers.

Mature reflection, it is to be hoped, will convince you that the second Committee were not unreasonable in expecting that their report would be laid on the table instead of being put under it, and the minority only hoped and expected to secure a stock vote of one million to twelve hundred thousand dollars, in effect saying to your President and Directors, here is a plain and distinct avowal of one-third in amount of your stock, and from more than one-third in numbers, earnest of Benicia works, New-York commercial agency, insurance, &c., &c., to the extent of $300,000 to $400,000, should be reduced, the policy of the Company should and may be changed so as to add $600,000 to net earnings, with a timely warning that obstruction in these respects had too long prevailed.

A test vote was urged and was not had; the President favored it, but others of his supporters did not. Beside, the bequest display of petition by the President upon the pledgers, denominated in his name, disinclined many to test by a tedious stock vote the question of having the second Committee's report on the table, and in fact it was laid under it, in contradistinction to the first report, which doubtless would have shared the same fate but from the inherent opposition by many to your upon two distinct reports upon different subjects at one, at first attempted by the majority.

These views are respectfully submitted to your consideration, as answering the attack of your President and Directors, upon the report made by your second Committee.

The length of this communication might present to a pause here. But looking to the fact that the first Committee entrusted to the undersigned the preparation of their report, (carefully adding and revising,) it may not be amiss to consider and weigh other views of your President as contained in his written statement of June 28, and first in order, his "regret" that he was not allowed to report to you the "fallacies" contained in the printed pamphlet of reports "before the pamphlet was given to the press."

I would recall to your mind the assertion made at the meeting of the 28th June, by a gentleman then present, that these reports were in the hands of a journal twenty-four hours before their submission to your body, merely to say, that the proof-sheet of the first Committee corrected by them, passed over to the printer on the evening of the 19th; that copies of the pamphlet reached the hands of Committee about 10 o'clock on the morning of the 20th June; the copy to be read from was not finally revised and compared with proof until about 12 o'clock of that day; that copies were sent to all but two members of these Committees, one of whom, being without an office, and in the country, was expected to call for it, and the other being distant, and on the Committee as to Nicaragua negotiation, one was placed in his hands some ten or fifteen minutes before the opening of the 20th June meet, when the bundle containing these reports was opened, preparatory to the meeting, and when your President took one in hand, and with whom both your Committees had varied and frequent intercourse at their several sittings; the meetings of the first being generally at your office, those of the second, from necessity and convenience, but once held there.

This narration best answers the "regrets" entertained, and contradicts the statement of the gentleman, that the pamphlet named was in "a journal's" "possession twenty-four hours before submitted to your body.

A sideway issue has been raised on this point, and there seems to be some motive for magnifying it, and hence to explain the subject fully and fairly it is thus dwelt upon with the further remark that at your meeting of 20th June, (when reporters were present) the pamphlet was taken from the table by those assembled, and so far as the journals of the day came under observation, there was no reference to these reports until the morning of 21st June, after your meeting of 20th June, and after you had considered these reports, to this day I believe they have not been yet entire in the newspapers.

It will be recollected that the motion to adjourn made by one of your Directors and seconded by me, cognizant of the views and wishes of both Committees, that they were designed to reach men's judgment, and personally desirous that the facts and figures therein contained in the two reports and fully arranged should be weighed by your President and Directors, and perchance influence their judgment, and hoping, though not believing, that they might change the future and permanent policy of your Company.

Another consideration also controlled, that it was more honorable to defer action upon the reports, for a Committee as proposed under the first one, seeing that the President and Directors had not the opportunity carefully to weigh their scope and tenor, and realizing, at the first meeting, that your President in pointing out errors in these reports had appeared to misconstrue portions of them, viz.: as to the reduced cost of steamships, and as to the excess of premiums paid on marine insurance over that of fire, upon the steamships out of use on the Pacific, and these objections, on the part of your President upon explanation, were substantially withdrawn, and being thus treated in the President's subsequently written statement, are presumed now to be admitted as accurate.

Indeed, the written statement referred to specifies but two errors in the Committee's reports, and the opportunity here presents to comment upon them.

The President asserted in his statement that there is but eight months' supply of coals instead of over twelve months', as stated by your Committee, and also adds that 16,000 tons, equal to six months' supply. "You will observe by the balance-sheet of May 1:

	Tons.
There were on hand	21,916
In transits	2,098
Of coal	23,014

The Committee would have doubtless been nearer accuracy had they said the amount paid on these coals, $456,663, was about equal to a twelve months' supply, including the $17,778 paid for coal, per note to first report.

Not having the exact data at hand for investigation as to the consumption of coal by your steamers, it may be assumed with safety that your Committee's statement of there being over twelve months' supply of coal is nearer accuracy than that of six months, as stated by your President in his carefully prepared statement.

As to the sum of $100,000 being "beyond the considerable amount to be saved by dispensing with the New-York commercial agency," the authority is the bookkeeper of the Company, who reiterated it to your Committee, and at same time explained the labor of getting at the precise sum, which the Committee regarded as unnecessary, and for the purpose of showing the saving per annum in dispensing with it.

The challenge of your President to produce facts and figures from the pamphlet stamping the policy of your Company "to accumulate property for the past two years," it would be unwise to accept, for it would not promote your good. I shall rather decline, therefore, taking it up, leaving it, as the Chairman of the first Committee has done, by reminding you of the Golden Age purchase, with the St. Louis here, and saying that to any five of your number it is susceptible of proof that beyond that steamer, the evidence of accumulation existed in 1853.

As well might your President challenge proof that your Company have for years absorbed other like properties on the Pacific Ocean, and then turning around, their resale has followed; or that the capital represented by stocks and bonds, in the first instance, and based on steamships, real estate and other property, has been wielded to pay large per annum commissions, &c., to your President and New-York commercial agents and others, while you as stockholders have received no dividend, but your capital stock has been diminished materially from 1853 to the present period of time.

I revert again to the opposition and competition in prices, to see upon whom the chief responsibility rests of a policy so disastrous to your interests during the past three years.

Who in 1853 refused the written propositions of the New-York and California Steamship Company, through its directors, to agree upon fair and remunerating rates?

Who refused to ratify the 20th of May, 1853, contract made by Mr. Knight, the San Francisco agent, whereby full rates were established, and all conflicting interests harmonized without division in passenger receipts, between the two routes?

Your President and five Directors, who held office at your hands, excluding the new Director, appointed November, 1854.

Examine and scrutinize the policy of your Company from its initiation, and preceding 1853, and at the several points of time when George Law, Esq., Messrs. Howard & Sons, and the associate owners of the Winfield Scott and Cortes sent their steamships on the Pacific Ocean, and including those of the New-York and California Steamship Company, as also Mr. Mills, in 1853 and 1854, (bottomried to Commodore Vanderbilt,) and what has that policy been?

Opposition in prices and ruinous competition; purchase of the steamships of other lines, or the bartering of them direct or indirect, so far as property is concerned; in its effects on individuals you need but look around your own community to read the disasters inflicted, so that when the historian shall trace the causes which led to opening those Pacific possessions to our arts and arms, and the civilization which is following, and will follow in their train, (and which with contemplation grows in magnitude,) recounting the genius of our Government in erecting a nail; the daring of a Harris in "taking the responsibility" of a mail contract, and the enterprise of an Aspinwall in concentrating and in part furnishing the means, with young, giving vitality to the undertaking, he may and probably will mention as an incident, the policy which has controlled your Company in its relations to other property and to other men, and perhaps trace it to the weakness in our common humanity, which makes surrounding success a severer ordeal to character than moderate adversity or severe reverses.

At the same time, that policy which warred against property, that individuals who held it, must admit that condemnation as disturbing equally in prices, the foundation of all commercial transactions.

When we cannot see the astonishing disasters which have befallen this Company since May 1, 1853, (the week of the San Francisco, the Winfield Scott, Golden Gate, respectively the Golden Age,) in value nearly reaching one and a half of our whole capital, the reflective mind contrasting them with the other roads, and with allowance for the general disasters of the year, will ponder over them, and though we may not interpret His providence, we may read a lesson alike of judgment to prosperity, and mercy to individuals, which commends itself to the consideration of all.

Our President would seem to endeavor to array old stockholders against new, and the October, 1854, Committee against the June, 1855, and for what good purpose?

Is not the division of property made and determined between the stockholders prior to May, 1853, and those who came after, and save in this respect, who shall determine just where the old interests and new interests begin and divide?

They are one for good or evil, and all surely may unite in this view of a "united interest;" for one, I protest against any other line of demarcation than is found in the liquidating account of old concerns, and which your President avows he has kept up since October last.

The October, 1854, Committee have not been selected upon by those of June, 1855, nor can it be admissible, as claimed by your President, "that the broadest latitude of inquiry should only authorize such Committees (June, 1855) to continue the labors of their predecessors." The Committee have raised no such question, nor have they reflected upon the labors of the other Committee.

The October, 1854, Committee was composed of three members—two new stockholders, and one a holder of both old and new stock, and now a Director of your Corporation—and it may be well to revert to the October meeting, and trace out in brief its organization and the creation of that Committee.

Your President called it to answer the written remonstrance of twelve stockholders against the purchase of the Golden Age from your President, in his individual character, on the ground that we wanted no more steamers on the Pacific; that if one was wanted, the St. Louis was at hand, and the condition of the Company forbade the outlay of $400,000 for this or any other steamer.

Your President called to the Chair a gentleman who held in time the $300,000 stock toward paying for the Golden Age. When her actual delivery at Panama was made, and $12,000, stock additional as his private account, and on the ground that he was the largest stockholder.

An improper appointment to say the least, as the action of your body might have been to reject the purchase, and here would have been a conflict of interest, between the "trustee" on one hand, and "chairman" on the other.

The high respectability of the presiding officer, shields him from any imputation in this remark; the subsequent selection of a St. Louis gentleman was unfortunately made, and who was Chairman of your October Committee, who before and after his appointment avowed his interest in the purchase of the Golden Age, and of course in her resale to your Company.

It was commented on immediately after the meeting, and you must judge whether with a Committee the majority of which were so constituted and the minority sans sees, the October reports are entitled to "equal respect" with the June reports. Your President has raised this issue.

Certain it is, that many stockholders are no better satisfied now, than in October, 1854, as to the purchase of the Golden Age, though they may have submitted to the rule of the majority in that respect; but their submission must not be tortured into acquiescence, in the purchase from your President in his individual capacity, on any other ground.

Your President and Directors have mistaken that silve conservatism on the part of the minority, which property and its management are so well calculated to inspire; which was shown by their silent observation from May, 1853, to October, 1854, when disastrous competition was pursued, which led to silent acquiescence in the purchase of the Golden Age, and which is evidenced in the reports of June, 1855, shutting out all by-gones, dealing only in facts and figures, assuming to command the reason of your Managers and of your whole body, so as to reduce your expenses some $350,000 per annum, fund your debt, increase the number of your Directors and abandon a policy which, the more examined, will be the more condemned by all right-thinking men, whether viewed in its pecuniary bearings, or those higher considerations which appeal alike to all.

This mistake is not to be wondered at, however deeply to be regretted, and by none more so than the undersigned. Examine your organization, and you will ascertain that all power and judgment on the part of your Corporation is in the hands of one man, as contrary to that necessary executive power as essential to corporate operations as to any other.

My experience with Corporations has been considerable, as many of you are aware, and almost invariably it has been my good fortune to act with majority Directors—sometimes with minorities, who did and could, after a fair test vote, turn around and act in perfect harmony with the clearly expressed will of such majority, where no principle was involved and where the difference was one of honest judgment.

But it has also been my fortune within three years past to oppose this one man power openly and unreservedly; in the one case in that avenue which opens up and brings to your doors the traffic of the West; in the other, in an adjacent State a tributary thereto, with a large New-York interest embraced therein. The peril so threatening to the one property and fraught with consequences so direful, is too fresh in your recollection to be named.

The ruin brought upon the other, has just now been exhibited to the public eye by stock and bondholders.

These allusions are not made in other spirit than to add to the influence which the present communication might have, and the warning that your property is, and has been in peril, in the judgment of others, as well as my own.

I have been a witness, for three years past, to the forms and influences which have been invoked to support the present management; have aimed to cooperate with your managers, was at the initiation of the 1854 contract with Nicaragua Co. and invited to their first council by your Presidential head, and am now told, that the nomination to one of your June Committees originated with your President. Certain it is that your "President and Directors" nominated two from each of your June Committees, on the one they proposed to create, you seconded the same charging them with certain duties as to the $500,000 bonds.

All has been unsolicited directly or indirectly on my part; indeed my preference was to act only as a plain stockholder, though I did not feel at liberty at first to reject the confidence which you then reposed; subsequent events demanded of those present a declination to serve on said Committee.

The appeal is made by your President, that your property is damaged by the reports,—let the facts be revealed and your judgment brought to bear on them, to see whether it is not perhaps a phantom or a bugbear in the mind of your Presidential head. Certain it is, that if the policy of your company is changed, and if such evil effects now exist, it will be repaired five fold not only by dividends, but by restored confidence in the public mind, whose faith has been shaken in the policy of your company as to net revenues, best illustrated by the fact, that your stock is at ninety-eight per cent on the book and uncurrent at thirty-five per cent, in the market.

Your President makes this remark; "The pamphlet is most objectionable to practical minds because it indulges in vague insinuations and not specific complaints and general criticisms, without providing remedies."

I ask you to determine whether it is not the array of facts and figures which has made the pamphlet "most objectionable" to your managers, and whether remedies are not clearly and pointedly designated therein. At your October meeting you will recall that your President impugned the motives that actuated my purpose in respect to your present management, even to the assertion that my object was to secure the agency of the Atlantic portion of the line; you will recall my silence, preserved by a predetermination to indulge in no personalities, from respect to those assembled, for the good of the property, and from a self-respect, which I hope ever to be able to adhere to, in all attacks from your President or his advisers.

Yet apart from my own assertion, the somersaults is new by me, that when the Vice President in September, 1854, solicited me in the absence of your President, to entertain a proposition which contemplated placing the Atlantic steamer agency in my hands, it was positively declined.

This proof was long since laid before a prominent party in interest in the Atlantic portion of your line, and is reverted to because it is assiduously circulated that my aim is to secure office under your corporation, and by those whom power may, if it will, have always at command.

In pertinacious remonstrance may mislead, and therefore I simply repeat of the impossibility to declare that there is no office at your command that would be accepted by me under any contingency that shall arise in the future.

My faith is pure, and I trust, same as in all large bodies of stockholders, in great and wealthiness; they may be misled, but time makes their proclaiming more effective and sure.

A few further remarks personal to myself, and I shall close this long communication.

At the fourth session (Committee) some you may recall the personalities indulged in, but only on one side; so many and so thick were they, that at their close the gentlemen from Staten Island interposed, lest your Presidential head should be the object of personal retort on my part.

I take this opportunity of returning my thanks to that gentleman for his kind intent, regretting that he had not known the course prescribed to myself, as no dream of personality on my part would have arisen in his mind.

At your adjourned meeting in June, your President's statement attacked the "fallacies" of the pamphlet; his friends and followers indulged in clamor, for no specific ground of objection to them was raised; and you will recall the fact, that an honorable gentleman asserted and reiterated, "that the reports of your Committees contained insinuations worse than untruths, and more injurious in their consequences." But was one named? Can one be pointed out?

I appeal to the reports, and if from them the evidence fails to be adduced, where stands the nine Committee men, and where the honorable gentleman?

Both must abide your verdict, and as one of the Committee—though joined to do so—I fearlessly leave that and the Presidential issue in your hands.

Undeterred by personalities or clamor, always evidence of a weak cause, I shall continue quietly to observe the course of your Managers, leaving it to time and the sequel to determine their motives and ——, and whether, at every consistent sacrifice, I have not aimed to protect our common property.

THEODOR DEHON.

The Tenth Ward R. N.'s—An Election—Night Prefacity—Jolly Times.

Punctual to the time our reporter dropped in among the brothers at the corner of Grand and Ludlow on Saturday night. His reception was courteous; a seat in the centre of the room being offered him, which from modesty and for want of a table near it, he could not accept. However, he feels grateful for the token of regard from Council No. 5.

The Council opened with Brother J. T. B——s in the Chair. After the usual formality of reading minutes, the Marshal was dispatched to the gate-room to bring in the candidates for initiation. He soon returned with a report that "there were none there." As this was the first time in the history of Council No. 5 that no candidate or candidates for initiation came forward, it created quite a sensation. Its effect on outsiders was canvassed, and the brothers feared it would work harm to the cause when it came to be reported in the DAILY TIMES. The next business was the election of three delegates to a County Convention to be composed of the same number of delegates from each Council in the City. This Convention is to elect an Installing Deputy for the City and County of New-York, and to make all the necessary arrangements for the Fall elections. They will doubtless try their hand at a platform in order to counterbalance the rebellious and contumacious resistance of all the Northern States to the Philadelphia Platform. Unless they do so, the North and of the Union cannot be saved. As a blinder to those not behind the scenes, a great number were nominated; but by a private understanding between the oracle and the Brother J. T. B——s, should be first elected; then J——s G——s, the ex-President, and, lastly, the oracle. Tellers of the right stamp having been appointed, the plan was carried out as to the first two candidates without trouble. In regard to the oracle, the question of his eligibility came up. It was urged that by the Constitution none but third degree members could be elected as delegates to any Convention, and that the oracle was only in the second. The Constitution was referred to as proof, and found to sustain this position; but the President, in accordance with previous arrangement, decided that this clause of the Constitution did not refer to Council No. 5. And even if it did, a majority of those present, (according to the Mogul,) could set it aside; and that it was the duty of every Brother to abide by the will of the majority, as expounded by its moguls and oracles. P——y B——n made a furious speech in favor of the decision,—avowed himself an American by birth (!) and in favor of the Philadelphia platform, and capable of controlling more votes than any other Know-Nothing in Council No. 5. That for these reasons it was due him to be elected. This speech silenced opposition; not for what was said, but from the fact that all could see, from the allowance of the oracle to speak when no question was pending, and from the decision of the President, that a determination existed to override the Constitution and all the three hundred rules of order.

Our reporter felt to express his opinion that Brother B., the President, is selling his cold water and Free-Soil notions for a small mess of pottage.

On counting the ballots it was found that the oracle had 32 out of the 41 votes cast. Long before the ballots were all read, the result became apparent and the applause commenced. Such hootings, hallooings and stampings have not resounded in Council No. 5 for many a day. When near the close, every ballot having on it the name of the oracle would cause a fresh gust of exultation, and by the time the affair ended, his friends swung their hats, exclaiming that if any one dared to say the oracle was not eligible to office, his teeth would be hurried down his throat.

Another push was now made for a candidate for initiation, in order to keep up the life of Council No. 5. As none had yet appeared, Brother J——n volunteered to go after Mr. S. C. S——n. Brother J——n soon returned, puffing and waddling, with the joyful report that he had fetched his man. With the greatest possible haste Mr. S——n was initiated, and is now a brother in regular standing. For his personal benefit, and to further his aspirations for Councilman of the Twenty-fifth Council District, our reporter suggests that he do not tell his Democratic brothers at St. Tammany of the step he has taken, and also that he urges himself along up to the third degree, or else he can't get Know-Nothing support.

After this initiation a collection was taken, and the Brothers contributed liberally. The round sum of eight shillings and five cents was gathered into the treasury. The oracle, however, seemed to think that it did not have a good look, and accordingly reported that he had an unpaid subscription-list amply abundant to meet all expenses.

An unsuccessful attempt was now made to take from the table the resolution offered at the previous meeting to restore the expelled Whig, Brother B——s. A storm arose, in the midst of which Brother W——r offered a rehash of the old resolution, which had caused all the troubles. At any time such a move would cause a storm, but to bring it forward when a storm was raging made things perfectly terrible. Wrath, vituperation, profanity and scurrility of the most alarming nature became general. The President seemed dumb-founded, and did not succeed in arresting attention until above the general din, one Brother was heard to call another "a d——d fool." At this the President, by a powerful effort, made himself heard, and said, "All [much] remarks must be addressed to the Chair." The oracle finally got the floor, and gave his usual speech. He seemed to have something against a man by the name of "Billseward," but what it was our reporter did not learn. The speech was uttered in so energetic a style of words, fists, stamping and jumping—such a brilliant succession of sense and nonsense—that justice cannot be done it in a report. He closed with a motion to postpone the matter indefinitely, and the motion prevailed.

The case of Dr. A. L. W——n did not come up—the Committee to reexamine him not being ready with a report.

Old troubles are now revived. The election of the oracle to a post to which only the faithful of the Third Degree are eligible was rather a gross violation of law. The meeting broke up in a row.

It appears that the little girl belonging to Gilmanton, N. H., who has become strongly attached to snakes, has made her appearance before the public at Concord, N. H., where she has been visited by thousands. The accounts which have been heretofore given of the attachment of the child to the reptiles are substantiated. The Statesman, in noticing this remarkable exhibition, says that there are but few people who can derive any satisfaction from the spectacle, and it is to be regretted that the child was not at first utterly cut off from its strangely sympathetic attachment to a reptile cursed of God and detested by man, lest the consequences have been as they would.

LONG ISLAND.

Brooklyn Public Schools.

Public School No. 6, on Classon-avenue, in the Seventh Ward, under the official charge of Messrs. F. TAYLOR, J. H. PUBLER, and ISAAC BERGEN, Special Commissioners, was visited Friday morning by our Reporter, in company with the City Superintendent, and Mr. ANTHONY, of the Board of Education; Mr. TAYLOR, of the Special Committee, being present.

The highest classes were examined in the formation of sentences in grammar and other studies, sufficiently to give a good idea of the comparative condition of the school.

The present school building is [illegible] situated on a lot 100 by 250. The structure [illegible] of wood, and, although comfortable and [illegible], is not very well adapted for through ventilation. The school, however, is an excellent one, having been under the care of Mr. S. C. BARNES, the able and devoted Principal, for twenty-one years. More good business men have been sent out from this school than from any other in Brooklyn, as was stated by members of the Board of Education in their remarks before the school.

A new site has been procured, fronting on Bedford and Walworth streets, south of Myrtle-avenue. The lot is 100x200 feet. A new edifice is about being commenced of larger dimensions; yet, from what we have been able to learn by reference to the plans about to be adopted, we greatly fear that a structure much inferior to what true economy and the best interests of education require, will be placed on this fine property.

The plans proposed are for a two-story building on piers above the play grounds, 80x115 feet, to be divided into class-rooms by means of large painted curtains—a plan first used in England, in the places temporarily fitted up for years of neglect, to receive the poor children on the introduction of the Lancasterian system there, but always condemned whenever more substantial structures could be obtained. Nothing less than a permanent, well-built, tasteful and perfectly designed building, that will accommodate at least 2,000 pupils comfortably, with at least eight class rooms (if such expensive, with well partitioned, ought to be thought of for a single moment by the building committee).

A commodious and well appointed school-house, where at least fifty or seventy-five pupils may exercise at a time, should enter into the design. Physical training is almost entirely lost sight of in our public schools, indeed, we know of but a single instance, No. 4 in Livingston-street, Brooklyn, and in which any regular provision has been made for systematic exercises. The grounds are ample, and if the parties who have the adoption and completion of plans for No. 4 desire to distinguish themselves they have an excellent opportunity to do so.

Less than forty or fifty thousand dollars will not build an economical structure. Now we think that a large sum for a College, or a "Pratt Institute," where a few hundreds only are designed to be accommodated.

The registered number of pupils in No. 4 Boys' Grammar School, is 150. Messrs AMASA MATHER, AMELIA HULSOOR, and ADRIANCE VAN ZANDT act as assistants to Mr. BARNES. Mrs. BARNES, the lady of the principal, teaches drawing in the school. No. 4 is distinguished for the superior penmanship. This branch is thoroughly taught, and the fine business hand of the pupils we have no doubt has often secured them situations where nothing else could have done so.

In the Girls' Grammar School the register is 165, under the care of Miss MARGARET H. BOYD, Principal; Misses ANNIE BOWNEY and MARY A. NASH, Assistants. The girls in this school appeared remarkably neat. Their manners, mental grace and promptitude were marked. The school was highly commended by the Superintendent and Mr. ANTHONY in their addresses.

The Boys' and Girls' Primaries have a total register of 601, about equally divided between them.

The Boys' Primary is under the care of Miss LIZZIE WEBB, Principal; Misses MARY A. BROWN and ELEANOR OLIVE, Assistants.

The Girls' Primary is under the care of Mrs. H. SCHOFIELD, Principal; Misses ANNIE KEMPT and A. E. MCLOWRY. The children appeared happy and comfortable, and the school was pronounced to be in a satisfactory condition.

The Examiners next called at School No. 5, in Bedford-avenue, in the Seventh Ward, near the line of the Ninth Ward and Fulton-avenue, known as the Bedford District. This school is situated delightfully, with extended open space around it. The present edifice is of wood, two stories, and the school is a mixed one—the boys and girls being taught together.

The Register in the Grammar School is 209, under the charge of F. D. CLARK, Principal; Miss JULIA S. DAVIS, Vice Principal; Misses HUTTON and CLARK, Assistants. Miss DAVIS teaches a class in French, Botany and Algebra, in addition to her other duties, and is a very able and accomplished teacher. The school is in good condition, and has made satisfactory progress. The exercises in singing were superior.

The visitors' books show that parents neglect their duty here as much as in our schools. More attention is usually given to a pig or a puppy than to children, and their teachers, by the majority of parents.

The Primary, also a mixed school, has a register of 250, under the care of Miss VAN DEVENTER, Principal, and Misses MOODIE and KNIGHT, Assistants. There is an intermediate department with a register of 140, under the care of Misses GARDNER and M. N. SPENCER. This school is in a fair condition.

No. 3 is one of the oldest schools on Long Island, and, it is said, having been in existence before the Revolution, as far back as A. D. 1740. The late Mr. JOHN VANDERVOORT acted as teacher for more than 60 years, and Mr. REM. LEFFERTS, an aged cit

THE FIFTH EDITION OF
MR. HILLARD'S
SIX MONTHS IN ITALY,
IS NOW READY.

Uniform volume, cloth, $2 50; calf, with Murray's Handbook, $4. Price $1 50.

Notwithstanding a similar character has received more attention in the literary world for many years than this volume, work of Mr. Hillard, "Universal popularity followed the first edition from the press; and it has taken its place with high praise among the central books of our day. The first part of this work published in two volumes, but as this form for travelers in Italy was considered too cumbersome, the publisher has put the whole work complete in one volume, at a moderate price.

From the New-York Albion.

Mr. Hillard has fairly carried us with him from the first page to the last. His book will become the guidebook to Italy.

From the New-York Times.

We work will be issued in America for a long time more attractive than these most valuable volumes.

A Guide of travels which has not failed to take the highest classical rank.

From Murray's Handbook for Italy.

A work remarkable work entitled "Six Months in Italy," by Mr. Hillard, an American lawyer of great literary skill, has just appeared. Its perusal will well repay the reader, not only on the spot, but at home, before and after his return from the travels.

The "Leader of the van!"
DOMESTICKS

Humorous and grotesque volume, binding, cloth, gilt, elegantly illustrated, $1. Is outselling by ten to one all the wonderful publications. When Lord Macaulay finished, he said, "Have you read 'Domesticks?'" The journals of the country are ringing with complimentary notices of the book.

The Home Journal, N. P. WILLIS, Esq., Editor, says: "Delicious, so copied, so talked of, so pulled out of every pocket in the land to read aloud, so relished and quoted over as 'Doesticks?' writings, were never launched on the wind."

From the New-York Daily Times.

Nothing so small shaft of fun, wit and cleverness in this volume. We recommend this volume to the novels of the season—though with him now that he has garnered in his harvest, enriched and illustrated by capital humorous designs.

From the Newark (N. J.) Advertiser.

We cordially recommend this volume not only as a successful effort in a new field of literature, but as a quaint teacher of morality, a promoter of good works, and an improver of public taste.

From the Boston Post.

The book will "take," and "go" to sell."

From the Boston Atlas.

Those who have not read the book will do well not to lose the present opportunity to enjoy its wit and humor.

From the New-York Express.

"Doesticks" is just the book for "a small tea party," now that respectable people must keep up their spirits without having recourse to the original package.

"One of the most Remarkable Books of the Day."
CONE OUT CORNERS.
BY BESAILEY.
466 pp., cloth, illustrated. Price $1 25.

"Cone Out Corners" deserves a "puff," for it is one of the most remarkable books of the day. Who the author is we know no more of knowing; but he may safely challenge comparison with the very best writers of fictions, who enjoy the favor of the reading public. He is a thorough master, elegant in his style, a graphic describer of character, natural in his dialogues, a discriminating judge of character, natural in his dialogues, a genuine humorist, and sure to be welcomed by his thousands of readers. Whenever he comes before the public again, he has only to justly compare his work in Thackeray in his power of depicting character. That renowned painter of human nature lays on his shades or coloring with no greater delicacy of touch than the author of "Cone Out." Some of the sketches in this book are equal to Thackeray's best, after a perusal of some of the best of Dickens. One is reminded by some of the chapters, of portions of that fascinating work, "Bleak House." Humor and satire enliven many of its pages, and the whole may be read with unalloyed pleasure and delight from beginning to end. Captain Mayleroche is a character drawn in broad tints, and well drawn, too; though in some of his drunken moments he is allowed to talk too much for our taste. But nobody can forget him. Miss Prover and the Doctor are also remarkably well drawn characters, and live as distinctly in the memory after reading, as any of the immortal ones of "Boz." We predict for the volume a "run" not at all behind the "Lamplighter."

MY BONDAGE AND MY FREEDOM

exhibits the fine genius, and the rapidly developing powers of its author. If he is original and peculiar as a speaker, he is equally so as a writer. We have the full development, therefore, that this work, the result of his riper experience and of his more mature judgment, will challenge not only the admiration of all the friends of Freedom, for its spirited and irresistible Anti-Slavery facts and arguments, but of scholars, for the directness, simplicity and excellence of its style, and of the general reader, also, for the graphic interest of the story of his checkered and eventful life.

This is the title of a modest, unpretending volume, written by a Georgia Huntsman, that has just fallen under our notice.

Its avowed purpose, as stated in the preface, is the eliciting of thoughts on various topics connected with education and politics. The book is in the form of a romance, but the novel element only so the basis for the discussion of various discussions on the above named important subjects.

We think the book is admirably fitted for the work designed, and commend it to our readers.

THE EXPEDITION TO NICARAGUA.

[Correspondence of The New-York Daily Times.]

ON BOARD THE BRIG "TURK'S ISLANDER," OFF TURK'S ISLANDS, W. I., June 27, 1855.

Three weeks ago yesterday evening, I left NEW-YORK with eighteen other passengers, on board this brig, a fast sailing schooner, bound for the Island of Turk's Island, thence to Aux Cayes, Jamaica, and thence to San Juan de Nicaragua. Finding that the expedition to which he had been subjected at New-York, of unnamed parties, would only cease with the breaking up of his projected expedition to Nicaragua, he determined to forego his desire for a fair trial in the United States Courts, and accordingly chartered and provisioned the Emma, in the expectation of reaching San Juan before the end of June. You will see by the date of my letter, that in his hope we have been disappointed, and with reason will possibly be interested to hear the reason.

Our adventures on the voyage were mostly those of unmarried men, mechanics and merchants, with a sprinkling of Western frontiersmen, who had been more inured than the rest to the hardships of out-of-door life. Altogether they were a very fair collection of emigrants, and not at all likely to bring discredit upon the Colonel's enterprise. I presume, however, that you will be more anxious to know the events of our voyage and causes of our being brought to the harbor of Grand Turk, than to have a description of our passengers, and therefore postpone it to another time.

We left New-York with a southwest wind, which continued, with rather rough weather, till the 14th inst., when we were off Bermuda. The wind then hauled E. S. E., being the trade winds of the "Bermuda Latitude," (so called from the necessity, in which sailors of the islands thereabout are frequently exposed, of throwing their cargoes of cedar overboard,) blowing in that direction till the 17th, when, at 8 o'clock P. M., we saw land ahead, bearing southwesterly, which proved to be the north point of the Cayocos Islands, a group of three, forming the east side of Turk's Island Passage.

Through this passage, which is considered by navigators a very safe one, the captain should have run his vessel; but, in consequence of losing his reckoning, he took another direction, steering westerly before the wind down the island towards the Cayocos Passage, which is lined for forty or fifty miles with dangerous reefs, extending a long distance from shore. At 4 o'clock P. M., we were startled by a shout of "Breakers ahead!" and sure enough, on looking over the bows, we found ourselves within half a cable's length of the breakers of St. Philip's reef, and sailing at the rate of six knots an hour directly upon it. The captain was in the cabin writing down the observations which the mate was taking with his quadrant, and there we were, with the green shallow water revealing the coral rocks beneath, and the breakers whitening and roaring almost under our bows. But a short distance ahead lay an anchor, probably left by some wrecked vessel, protruding from the foaming waves upon the reef. Fortunately, however, the exertions of the passengers under the command of Captain SWIFT, we were saved from running aground, but the vessel made a most narrow escape.

Heartily thankful for the rescue, we once more stood off down the coast, the sky being clear, the weather fine, and the blue hills of the Cayocos in full sight. There was, nevertheless, a general feeling of uneasiness among the passengers, until about a quarter before 11 o'clock, when we were roused from our berths by a tremendous jolting and crunching against the keel that told the whole story. It was a moment of intense excitement.

We had struck the same reef on which the vessel had run in the afternoon, some forty miles to the westward, and with sails all spread, were going right ahead on the crest of the reefs. In vain the captain shouted "Hard up the wheel," and gave orders to haul in the main tack. It was too late. The crew and passengers tugged and pushed at the main boom with the energy of desperation, but the schooner still went on jumping and thumping over the hard reef in a manner that left us no other resource than to haul down the sails, which was done almost instantly.

Amidst all, the Colonel preserved his self-composure, and proceeded at once to secure a supply of provisions for the boat. Some came to him with proposals to sail in the boat in search of land, and to return with a report of their success. "No," said the Colonel. "There is not the least danger of the ship's going to pieces before morning; the tide is ebbing and the land is not far off. The first man who attempts to escape by the boat shall be shot." This explicit declaration put a stop to any further agitation of the project, though there were quite a number who still thought that their time for this world was up. In truth, there seemed some reason for fear, as every lurch of the vessel grated along her keel, and shook her timbers from stem to stern. The hold also began to bilge, and as the schooner careened, her mainmast strained as if it would go over.

At last it was determined to drop our anchor astern, thereby lessening the shock which the schooner received from rushing on the reef, which, as it was, came very near staving in her hull. This occupied something near two hours, the key of the anchor being out of order, and no chain having been provided to attach it to the boat, so that we were compelled to fasten it by a two-and-a-quarter inch rope, which, in case of any unusual strain, would have snapped like so much twine. After this was done nothing remained but to wait in quiet till morning, and most of us lay down on deck, either sleeping or counting the hours as they slowly passed. The moon had now gone down, but the captain declared that he still discerned land lying some three miles off—or at least what looked very much like it—beyond the reef.

During the wrecking it was rather singular to observe the different ways in which the men behaved themselves. Some divested themselves of their coats and boots; some filled their pockets with sea biscuit, and had bottles of fresh water concealed under their coats. In the absence of any more serious apprehensions, my principal concern was to collect my books, which were lying around loose, so that they might not get a drenching in the sea water which occasionally swashed over the deck.

The only one who seemed to have no care at all on his mind, was little DANIEL WEBSTER, who whistled and sang as if he was in his element, to the great horror of one of the more sober-minded, who recommended him to confine himself to saying his prayers and other exercises appropriate to an solemn occasion. This conduct, however, was entirely consistent with his behavior throughout the voyage, for DAN had acquired from his boating excursions in Marshfield Harbor the expertness and freedom from fear of an old salt. Even in the afternoon previous, as we were running direct upon St. Philip's Keys, he was sitting high up on the cross-trees, coolly surveying the danger, when, had we struck the rock, he might have been pitched fifty feet into the water.

About 4 o'clock a faint light illumined the horizon, and all hands gathered upon the windward side to watch the signs of land. The ugly grating and thumping still continued among the coral rocks, which were plainly visible at a depth of three or four feet under the bows. The vessel now lay upon her side, and it was clear that nothing could get her off the reef until her cargo should be carried ashore. The life-boat was accordingly lowered with a view of ascertaining the nearest place of landing, and the mate and three sailors who were in it tugged at the oar, using their best efforts to row her over the breakers into the smooth water which lay a few rods beyond, and at last pronounced the attempt out of the question.

The Colonel then stepped in and declared they must try again; and again they were baffled. But he was not to be put off in this manner. Standing at the bows, towering a head above us all, and with the energy of an old Roman written on his weather-beaten visage, he threw off his coat, and letting himself down by a rope into the dashing waves, which nearly reached his breast, he waded out to the boat, and fairly pushed it over the breakers into a safe harbor, whence it carried a store of provisions and little DAN WEBSTER to the shore about three miles off. The Colonel then ordered timbers to be thrown overboard, and with the aid of Capt. SWIFT and others of the passengers who followed, among whom Mr. WEST, of Washington, and Mr. WESTBROOK, were distinguished, proceeded to form a raft and take on board the ship stores, of which a large supply was on board.

Meanwhile, little DAN, who, by the way, is only fifteen years old, being left on shore, in order to guard the provisions which had been left there from the negroes, the boat returned and was busily employed all day in carrying barrels, boxes and baggage generally to the island, which proved to be the Northwest Cayocos Island, commonly called by the fifty or sixty half-starved colored people who inhabit it, Blue Cayocos, from the appearance of the hills on its northern coast.

By nightfall almost everything had been taken off either by our men or by the wreckers, three of whom boarded us almost at the same time, and commenced stripping the rigging and sails in good earnest, as if by a sort of divine right. They were all from Turk's Island, whither they proposed to take their plunder, a little more conveniently than the capsize and Colonel KINNEY were disposed to allow.

About 8 o'clock in the afternoon the last boat load of passengers, among whom was the Colonel, left the schooner, and it was with no little pain that we viewed the beautiful craft lying on her side among the rocks, the helpless victim of the winds and waves, or our no less merciless assailants, the wreckers. To the Colonel especially, who had struggled against every conceivable embarrassment, and had expended over fifty thousand dollars in hard money to promote his darling undertaking, the wreck was distressing indeed.

Nevertheless, though after passing a sleepless night, he had worked in the water all day, and had seriously injured himself by lifting heavy articles and timber from the vessel to the boat; his courage and resolution never failing him an instant. He has never quailed before any obstacles heretofore, and, even now, while so sick that he can with difficulty move about, he works with the dispatch and energy of ten ordinary men in full health, to forward his great design. His conduct during and subsequent to the wreck has only served to increase the confidence of his men in his abilities as the leader in the work of colonizing Central America.

In this connection the efforts of his coadjutor, Capt. SWIFT, deserve especial mention. His thorough seamanship, his coolness and unflagging energy, were of invaluable service. He seemed entirely to forget his own safety in his anxiety to assist others.

Our adventures on the beach of Cayocos Island, where we slept for two nights, miles from any human habitation, as well as at Turk's Island, which we reached in two small vessels, one a sloop of seventeen tons, and another a schooner of fourteen, after a rough and dangerous passage of ninety miles easterly over the Cayocos Bank, I reserve for another letter.

I will merely mention that the mainmast of the latter was so strained, in addition to other damages, that she was obliged to put ashore at what is called East Harbor, some twenty miles short of her destination, and did not arrive till two days after the sloop which started on the same day and arrived here on Monday the 25th inst. We have been very kindly treated by the American Consul, Mr. NELSON, in whose building most of our men have found comfortable lodgings, and by Mr. B. EVERETT SMITH, his predecessor, now a merchant on the island. We are also under particular obligations to his Honor, Mr. JAMES MISICK, the Vice President of the Colony of Turk's Island and the Cayocos, as well as to other members of the Government, whose courteous attention to Colonel KINNEY were doubly welcome in consideration of the circumstances under which he arrived.

We leave to-morrow, by a British vessel, for our port of destination in Central America. W. S. T.

Cassius M. Clay in Kentucky.

The following letter is from the Richmond (Ky.) Messenger. We have seen no mention made of the incidents referred to, in any other quarter:

MOUNT VERNON, KY., Monday, July 2, 1855.

COL. JOHNSON—Dear Sir: On Friday last I listened to one of the most remarkable as well as one of the most inflammatory speeches I ever heard. It had been published for some time that C. M. CLAY was to address the people at Brush Creek meeting-house, in this county, on the Kansas and Nebraska bill; and having a desire to hear that subject discussed, I went to hear him, but to my disappointment I heard but little upon that subject, it only being alluded to by Mr. C. in connection with the mob proceedings (as he termed them) of the Missourians in the late election there, which seemed from the vehement manner that he spoke, was only done in order to arouse the passion of his followers to put them in order to receive what followed.

He at once took up the Slavery question, and after depicting the awful sinfulness of the institution, and its blighting influence upon the community, and contrasting (in the most demagoging manner,) the most flourishing portion of some of the Free States with some of the most worn-out portion of Virginia and South Carolina, he said that he had come there that day to roll away the great stone—that it needed no more, he asked what their plan was for setting the negroes free; that their motto was freedom on the soil; that they were as much entitled to it as any man or woman on the ground, and that the time was close at hand when those who contended for remuneration for their Slaves would be glad to get off even; for upon the great principle of "doing unto others as they would have others do unto them," the negro would have a right to ask for a remuneration for his services.

He denounced in the bitterest words the old Democratic and Whig parties, and said they could not be trusted, and as to the Know-Nothing party, he gives it particular thunder, and seemed to have no confidence in any but the Free-Soil party, which he said was now in the ascendancy; that their cause was now secure; and went on to show the strength of that party: and the number of negroes in the South over the whites; which he said, in a conflict, would of couse be added to the Free-Soil party, so that they had nothing to fear; that the time had now come to make a demonstration, and he for one was willing to do his part.

He then spoke of the treatment that JOHN G. FEE had received at the Dripping Spring in Lincoln County; that they had applied to the court of justice for redress, and had been refused; and he now intended that Mr. FEE should go to the Dripping Spring, and there speak his sentiments, as a freeman; and he intended to go with him and stand by his side; and if any man, or set of men, took him down, they should do it over his dead carcass. He then called on the crowd to know how many there were on the ground who would go with them, when a number of voices were heard that they were ready and willing to go. He then told them to furnish their rifles, if they had any; if no rifle, their double or single barrel shot guns, their Colt's revolvers; and if they had neither, then their kitchen butcher knife, for the thing had to have a beginning, and it had as well begin at the Dripping Spring as at any other place.

He said the time for the meeting at the Dripping Spring would be set in a few days, of which they should have due notice; and that they would meet and consult, and they would not meet in a barn, out-house, or any secret place, like the Know-Nothings, but in open daylight like freemen. He said that the Pro-Slavery party, both in word and action, give the lie to the Declaration of Independence, but he would say in the language of PATRICK HENRY—"Give us liberty, or give us death."

Now, Mr. Editor, it cannot be otherwise than admitted that Mr. CLAY is a talented man, and it cannot be otherwise than true, that he is one of the greatest demagogues in this country. He spoke most vehemently about the old parties stifling the common school system, stating that the perpetuity of this country all depended on the virtue and intelligence of the people, knowing at the same time that he and those who he sends out, in all instances, go where there is the least education, to arouse the passions and prejudices of the people with their treasonable doctrines.

Yours, respectfully, W. H. KIRTLEY.

Mr. Jolliffe in South Carolina.

MR. JOLLIFFE, who recently went to South Carolina from Ohio, to carry into effect the will of Mr. WILLIS, bequeathing his property to his slaves, has published the following letter in regard to his reception and treatment there:

Messrs. EDITORS: As something has been stated in newspapers respecting my treatment in South Carolina, it is due to some gentlemen in that State that I make a correct statement.

On the 29th of June I went to Barnwell, in Barnwell District, South Carolina, delivered a letter of introduction to a gentleman in that place, and put up at a hotel. The next morning I was informed by a gentleman who called on me for that purpose, that, near the town, there was a meeting of some persons from the country to consult in reference to myself, but that they had been persuaded not to molest me.

After breakfast I was met in the hall of the hotel by two men, Captain WALKER and JOHN MIXON, who stated that it was their purpose to take me back to Williston, and that a buggy was ready for me at the door. They assured me that I would be treated as a gentleman, and upon my invitation went into my room. I locked the door; MIXON seemed a little alarmed, but I pointed to my pen knife lying on a stand, and assured him it was my only weapon, and reminded him that they were two to one. I then explained to them the purpose of my visit. I agreed to go with them as soon as I should pay my bill. When that was done, Col. BARNEY H. BROWN (to whom I had a letter of introduction from Rev. JOSEPH T. ROBERT, of Zanesville) and other gentlemen took WALKER and MIXON aside, and after some conversation induced them to forego their purpose of taking me from Barnwell.

Col. BROWN and others then returned to me and told me that I had the privilege of remaining in Barnwell till I could transact my business—replied that I claimed it as a right and wanted no privilege. I was then told that I was indicted to me, that I was an Abolitionist. I said to them: I am an Abolitionist to the very core of my heart. After that, several gentlemen called to see me, and I was treated, not merely with kindness, but with marked civility and respect. I feel myself greatly indebted to Col. BROWN and other gentlemen of the town for their kindness.

The whole agency against me was raised I believed by hate and malice of ELIJAH WILLIS' estate, hoping perhaps to frighten me from the discharge of my duty, and perhaps with the silly expectation of having some influence upon their Courts in the adjudication of a controversy respecting the will.

I stayed in Barnwell until my lawyer told me there was nothing more that needed my personal attention. I then returned to Williston, and remained there till 9 o'clock Monday morning, when I took the cars and went to Virginia, on a visit to my mother, and returned home.

JONAS JOLLIFFE.

CINCINNATI, July 16, 1855.

NEWS BY THE MAILS.

A correspondent of the Boston Traveller, writing from Madison, Wis., says: "This place is now accessible by railroad from Milwaukee and Chicago. The Milwaukee and Mississippi Road is completed to this point, and is being rapidly pushed westward. The most direct route from Chicago is by the Chicago and Galena Road to Belvidere, in Illinois, and thence by a branch road, now completed, to a point fifteen miles beyond Beloit, and five miles from Janesville, thence by stage to Janesville, and thence by a branch road connecting with the Milwaukee and Mississippi Road, the trains upon each road meeting at the junction. Since the completion of the Lake Shore Road from Chicago to Milwaukee, that has become the traveled route from the former city to this place."

The Baltimore American says that the shot tower in that city has had, for some months, a large force employed in the manufacture of bullets. There is no positive knowledge as to the destination of these death-dealing articles, but as there is no special demand for them in this country, the probability is that they are destined for the Crimea, both inside and outside of Sebastopol. One large order filled in Baltimore was for a Greek house, rendering it more than probable that they have already been used by the Czar's troops.

Seven slaves belonging to WILLIAM MCCOY and others of Pendleton county, Va., eloped a few nights ago, each one taking a horse with him. They are doubtless making their way to Canada. PURCHASERS AT A FORCLOSURE SALE.

Grady vs. Ward.—A motion is made in this case to compel the bidder, at a foreclosure sale, to complete his purchase. He objects, on the alleged ground of insufficiency of title. Michael Smith, through whom, it appears, the title is derived, died many years ago,—but after the Revised Statutes of 1830,—leaving a will, in which he devised the property in question to three trustees, of whom the late Dr. Power was the last survivor in trust, to pay the rents to his daughter (Mrs. Ward,) during her life, and on her death, to divide the property equally among her issue, each to receive his or her share at 21, or marriage, and the rents in the meanwhile to be applied to his or her support. Mrs. Ward died after her father, leaving two infant children, Ann and William. Ann came of age five or six years ago, and was then, of course, entitled to a conveyance of the one undivided half of the premises. Under the statute, however, no formal conveyance was necessary. The trust ceased as to her half, and with it the trustees' title (sec. 68 of Statute of Trusts;) and by the 47th and 49th sections, the estate of the trustees was diverted, and the beneficiary became immediately seized of "legal estate," as well as entitled to the "beneficial interest." William, however, he being still a minor, was remanded in trust until November, 1854, when his minority having terminated, his legal estate commenced. From that point, the two grandchildren of Smith, whether regarded as his sole heirs at law, or as his sole beneficiaries by will, were the only persons having any interest, legal or equitable in the property. Their release, therefore—assuming their grandfather's title to have been good—would cure all the defects, if any, in the antecedent proceedings; and such release, it appears, has been actually executed and tendered. But independently of the release, the statute in relation to mortgages declares that a Chancery deed, on a foreclosure, shall be "an entire bar against acts of them (the mortgagors and mortgagees,) and against all parties to the suit." Now, the grandchildren, both of them, were parties to the suit, in which the decree of sale was made; and it is not pretended that there were any other parties in interest claiming under Smith. Whether the mortgage then, executed by Power, as surviving trustee and executor, was duly authorised or not, and whether the order of the Vice Chancellor which allowed it to be given was valid or not, is immaterial; after the decree of foreclosure the adult defendant was "barred" from raising the question, and after a sale in good faith under the decree, (especially a sale beneficial to his interests,) the infant was equally barred. But the trustee, it is said, was not a party to the foreclosure suit; and he, therefore, could not be barred by the decree. He was not a party, because, being dead, he could not be. But the Court, it is urged, (the trust by law having devolved upon it,) should have appointed a substitute. The Court in effect did so—it directed a sale and appointed a referee to conduct it, and a guardian ad litem to take care of the infant's right. And even if any formal irregularities had taken place, and the minority still continued, the Court acting for the infant, and having in its character of guardian and trustee full power, would new remedy all such defects. But they are remedied already—and remedied effectually by majority and release. Passing over all these objections, a more fundamental objection—one on which the counsel for the purchaser lays the greatest stress—presents itself in the alleged want of title either in Smith or in Smith's successors. Smith, it appears, purchased the property—then vacant ground—of William Bayard, more than thirty years ago, and immediately entered into possession and erected permanent buildings upon it. Bayard, it is clear, claimed to be, and acted as owner; and from the evidence, although not entirely complete for the whole period, it is obvious that the property had been assessed to him as owner, and that he paid the taxes on it as owner for fourteen years previous—showing an undisturbed possession for nearly half a century, during which one set of parties did no act and made no claim, while the other, uncontradicted and undisturbed, did both. In such cases the law is well settled that a deed—both its execution and loss—may be, and ought to be, presumed. Even where a trust existed, the Court (in Jackson vs. Brooke, 6 Wend., 467) presumed a conveyance after twenty-eight years. In Jackson vs. Miller, 9 Wend., 228, a partition, which is only a particular mode of conveyance, was presumed. In Jackson vs. McCall, 10 Johnson's Rep., 377, a conveyance was presumed after the death of a party and subsequent possession by his heirs for eighteen years. Such presumptions are indispensable to the quiet of titles and the peace of families. Absolute certainty is seldom attainable in human affairs—in titles to land, almost never. If thirty years' undisturbed possession, under absolute title, and that preceded by fifteen more in the maker of that deed, with no claim or assertion of claim elsewhere, be not sufficient to constitute a merchantable title, it would be difficult to find one short of a patent direct from the State. And had the price in the present case been as satisfactory as the title, the purchaser, I am inclined to think, would have made no objection to either. Besides, the purchaser has actually taken and retains possession. He has no right to say he holds as tenant for his lease had expired—and unless he is a purchaser he would be in as trespasser—a position which he seems is allowed by law to assume. He is, therefore, in the precise condition which renders a release appropriate, and makes it incumbent on him to accept that species of assurance. Having no doubt of the sufficiency of the title, I cannot do otherwise than grant the plaintiff's motion.

Before Hon. Justice Mitchell.

MARKET REPORTS.

Weekly Review of the Dry Goods Trade.

NEW-YORK, Wednesday, July 18, 1855—6 P. M.

There is a little more animation and confidence discernible in the Dry Goods trade this week; but, so far, the improvement in these particulars has not been of sufficient importance to merit any extended notice. Hence, we curtail our remarks.

Brown Sheetings and Shirtings remain in but moderate request, at previous quotations; while bleached goods are also sparingly dealt in, yet steadily held; and Ticks, Drills and Duck rule quiet at unchanged figures. All the favorite styles of Ginghams in market are taken, in lots, as wanted, at former rates. Lawns and Nankins have not varied much. The finer kinds of Cambrics are more salable and are doing better. Printing Cloths are sparingly offered at old prices, which precludes any great animation in them. Prints are in better supply, but as the inquiry is not brisk, prices are still somewhat nominal. A slightly improved demand prevails for Stripes and Ticks, which are steady and uniform in value.

Woolens are rather more sought after at unaltered figures. Blankets, Cassimeres, and Cloths, are pretty liberally dealt in and rule firm. Doeskins and Flannels are likewise in fair request at buoyant rates. Jeans and Linseys are moderately active and steady. Mouslin Delaines are more freely offered, and only await the incoming demand to find ready buyers at remunerative prices. Satinets and Tweeds are not very brisk, but they command full previous quotations.

Foreign productions are attracting more attention, and in regard to prices, present prospects afford much encouragement. The stock in market is not a large one for the season; and though it is pretty well assorted, the probability is that it will not be quite adequate, in some respects, to the wants of buyers. Hence, the confidence of importers, who are unusually easy about selling what they have to dispose of, until the thorough revival of business enables them to judge more accurately what the future course of the trade is likely to be. This circumstance debars all pressure upon the market, which, influenced by the increased demand and the favorable condition of monetary affairs, presents a livelier aspect.

Markets—Carefully Reported for New-York Daily Times.

WEDNESDAY, July 18—6 P. M.

ASHES—Are moderately active and steady at $6 50 for Pots, and $6 62½ for Pearls, ⅌ 100 lbs.

BRICKS—North River Hard are in fair supply and limited request at $8 75@$4 ⅌ thousand.

COFFEE—Rio is yet the most inquired for at buoyant prices; this day's transactions therein amounting to 2,200 bags, at 10½c.@11½c. ⅌ lb. Other kinds are in moderate demand at steady rates.

COTTON—This day's business has been extremely limited and irregular, all parties having been holding off for the Canada's advices. The latest sales effected were at the annexed quotations:

NEW-YORK CLASSIFICATION.	Uplands.	Florida.	Mobile.	New-Orleans and Texas.

Pickled Salmon are sparingly dealt at $22 50 ⅌ tierce, and $21 ⅌ bbl., as are likewise Pickled Herring at $4@$5 50 ⅌ bbl. Smoked Herring attract little more attention at 20c. for scaled and 35c. for No. 1 ⅌ box, but still there is not much activity in them, and our quotations are somewhat nominal. Connecticut Shad are tolerably salable and firm at $10 for No. 1 and $9 for No. 2 ⅌ half barrel.

FLOUR AND MEAL—State and Western brands, despite the circulation of reports of combinations to regulate the supply so as to keep up prices, are even more freely offered at easier rates, without occasioning any great improvement in the demand, which is almost exclusively for home use. This day's sales comprise 6,600 bbls. within our revised range:

Inferior State.....	$8 00 @ 8 12½
Ordinary State	8 12½@ 8 25
Straight State.....	8 25 @ 8 50

Included in sales mentioned above, were some lots of Common State taken to fill contracts, within our range. Canadian is still less active and cheaper. The operations embrace only 700 bbls. common to extra, at $9 75@$10 75 ⅌ bbl. Southern Flour is also dull and lower, with sales of 300 bbls. mixed to fancy and extra, at $9 87½@$12 ⅌ bbl. Rye Flour is moderately inquired for, including fine and superfine, in lots, at $7 25@$8 75 ⅌ bbl. Corn Meal continues in slack request at $4 62½ for Jersey, and $5 25 for Brandywine, ⅌ bbl.

FRUIT—No important change has occurred in this line, since our last.

GRAIN—Wheat is arriving more freely, but as parties disagree about prices, but little is being sold. A few small lots of new Southern Red brought $2 25 ⅌ bushel. Rye is dull and nominal. Barley and Barley Malt continue inactive and unsettled in value. State and Western Oats are in better request, and still command 61c.@64c. ⅌ bush. Corn is not over abundant, and as the inquiry is fair, for the home trade, as well as for export to Cuba, prices are pretty well supported. This day's movements add up 54,000 bushels, mainly Western mixed at 90c.@91c. ⅌ bushel, for good to prime.

HAY—About 300 bales River changed hands at $1 12½@$1 25 ⅌ 100 lbs.

HEMP—Remains inactive but firm, with moderate receipts and supplies.

HIDES—The demand has not been so animated, but holders have not been anxious to sell, and prices have remained firm. The stock now here is computed at a little over 100,000 of all kinds.

HOPS—Rule quiet, but steady at 23c.@25c. for last year's crop ⅌ lb., with only a very small quantity in market.

IRON—The market continues devoid of animation, but rules firm. 300 tons Scotch Pig brought $30@$31, usual terms, ⅌ ton.

LATHS—Eastern are in less request at $1 43¾ ⅌ 1,000 with more offering.

LEAD—We have nothing really new to notice in this line.

LEATHER—Domestic tanned Sole is in pretty brisk demand at firm prices. Other kinds are unaltered.

LIME—Rockland is rather scarce and needed, at 60c. for Common, and $1 15 for Lump, ⅌ bbl.

MOLASSES—Continues in moderate demand, but the light stock and high claims of factors still check operations. The day's sales consist of 150 bbls. New-Orleans at 31c.@33c.; and 70 hhds. Porto Rico at 31c.@32c. ⅌ gallon.

NAILS—All kinds are pretty freely dealt in at old quotations.

NAVAL STORES—Crude Turpentine remains inactive, but firm at $3 67½@$3 ⅌ 280 lbs. A moderate inquiry still exists for Spirits Turpentine at 48c.@49c. cash, ⅌ gallon. Tar is scarce and wanted, at $2 75@$3 25 ⅌ bbl. White Rosin is inactive, but quoted steady at $3@$4 50 ⅌ 280 lbs., according to quality. OILS—Whale and Sperm are still but sparingly dealt in at former quotations. Red and Olive Oils are without change. Linseed is in rather more request, at 89c.@90c. for large, and 90c.@91c. for small lots, ⅌ gallon. The stock is still light. Lard Oil has not varied.

NEW-BEDFORD OIL MARKET, July 16, (for the week.)—SPERM—We have no change to note in the market for Sperm since our last. Sales amount to 600 bbls., half-since of a cargo on the spot, at $1 70 ⅌ gallon. WHALE—The only transaction in Whale oil coming to our knowledge is a sale of 600 bbls., understood at 71½c. ⅌ gallon. WHALEBONE—Sales for the week 10,000 lbs. Cohotak at 46c., and 10,000 do. South Sea at 40c.

POTATOES—New are still plentiful and cheapest. We quote new Bermuda, $4; new Southern, $3 ⅌ bbl.; and new Long Island, 75c.@$1 12½ ⅌ bush. Old are dull of sale and irregular in value.

PROVISIONS—Pork is in fair demand, but at somewhat unsettled prices, the day's sales including about 1,000 bbls. at $19 75@$19 87½ for New Mess; $19 50 for Old Mess; and $16 62½@$16 75 for New Prime ⅌ bbl. SEEDS—Continue inactive and nominal. There is not a great deal of any kind here.

SPICES—Are also quiet and firm. The market is only very moderately supplied.

MEDICAL.

THE MARRIED WOMAN'S
PRIVATE MEDICAL COMPANION.
BY DR. A. M. MAURICEAU, Practitioner in Diseases of Women. One Hundred Edition (100,000) Just. pp. 384. 125th. Price paper, extra binding, $1.

Every woman can Have Discovery, by comparing her own symptoms with those described, the nature, character and cause of her complaint, and be enabled much sooner and suffering. The wife, about becoming a mother, has often need of instruction and advice in respect to her situation, which she will here find. This book tells her what is the matter, and tells her what to do for it, in simple but chaste words, and such as she can understand.

Those suffering from obstructions or irregularities peculiar to the female system, or from prolapsus uteri (falling of the womb), or from disease alone, will each find in its pages the means of prevention, amelioration and relief.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Dayton, Ohio.

DAYTON, May 1, 1856.

DR. A. M. MAURICEAU—My Dear Sir—My wife has been prevented by sickness for the last two years, and during that time of great anguish and suffering some months before and during confinement, every succeeding one more and more debilitated and prostrated her, putting her life in imminent danger, and which was on the MAX occasion despaired of. I supposed that this state of things was inevitable, and resigned myself to meet the worst. I heard your book highly spoken of, as containing some matters reaching my case. On its receipt and perusal it encouraged me to try the relief it offered my distressed mind and the result has been unexpected to my wife on learning that the great discovery of M. M. Mauriceau provided a remedy. A second a prospect of one which I felt convinced was possible. But for this, one another year would have passed over my head, in all human probability, my wife would have been in her grave and my children her motherless. I shall always remember the kindness of this discovery. His medicines for nervous debility, after removing the disease, leave the system in as good condition as before. Her nervous debility took up the disease therein. Office hours from 8 o'clock A. M. to 8 o'clock P. M.

DR. CORBETT—No. 19 Duane-st., may be consulted with confidence on the diseases of the sexes; he has been specially in the profession enables him to guarantee speedy and permanent cures. His method for treatment is the same as that practiced by the great Ricord, of Paris, and all cases he undertakes are treated with the greatest care. Dr. Corbett is a member of the New-York University. See his diplomas in his office.

DR. CHAS. D. HAMMOND—Surgeon, formerly pupil with Ricord, of Paris, and with Drs. Carnochan and Mott, of this City, has established his consulting and dispensing rooms at No. 319 Broadway. Charges moderate. Consultations on Syphilis. Office hours, 8 to 3 and 6 to 9 o'clock.

A PRACTICAL PRIVATE TREATISE—FOURTEENTH EDITION—343 pages, with plates. Price $1. Sold at Nos. 111 and 169 Nassau-st., No. 1 Vesey-st., (Astor House,) and by the author, JOS. RALPH, M.D., No. 4 Stuyvesant-st. Hours of consultation, from 9 to 12 o'clock A. M., and 6 to 9 o'clock P. M., (Sundays excepted.)

THE PROHIBITORY LAW.

[Before the City Tribunal.]

Tuesday, July 17, 1855.

The Liquor Business, like affairs before Bonaparte, continues unchanged. The evidence of the enforcement Inspectors committee to accumulate, but the thirsty post is never chronicled by the clerks. Some live nowhere; some anywhere; some think the gin they bought was poison. They had drunk liquor many a time, but such liquor never passed their lips before. They certainly drank of the adulterated stuff that is sold in the City, and whether positively they couldn't have been drunk, if the stuff they had imbibed in had been the real "Simon Pure," Not a few of them indulge in the hope that the Legislature will pass such a law as will prevent the sale of this poison. Some of the witnesses were exhaustedly getting drunk on genuine gin. Yesterday, however, there was no [illegible]—a gentleman was positive that the stuff he drank was imported.

The following is the record of yesterday:

FOR TOMBS.

Before Justice Bogart.

TWO GLASSES BIG WE.

Bridget McNamara, No. 19 Greenwich-street, got two glasses of beer at Donnelly's store in Washington-street; can't tell the number of the store. GOOD BIG 4U.

[illegible]

John Stanning, East-Forrest, got his liquor in Pearl-street, but don't know the number.

Jane Lawrer, No. 282 North-street, don't know the month name from where she purchased the liquor.

WHERE?

Thomas Alpin, No. 111 Sullivan-street, drank liquor in about one hundred places; was up town and down town, and all over the City; cannot recollect any of the places he got liquor. This beats the lager bier story. What next?

WAS AT A FRIEND'S.

John Wiley, No. 259 West Twenty-seventh-street, acknowledged himself to be drunk; got drunk on brandy at a shoemaker's, in the Eighth-avenue, near Thirty-third-street; did not purchase any liquor; did not drink liquor in any other house.

WASN'T DRUNK.

George Johnson, No. 115 West Twenty-eighth-street, was not drunk; drank only two glasses of malt beer; purchased one of them at the corner of Twenty-ninth-street and Seventh-avenue; paid for and drank the other at a place in Jane-street; cannot recollect the name of the person he purchased the beer of.

SOMEWHERE NEAR IT.

George Rosen Cross lives in Poughkeepsie; don't know where he got his liquor.

Third Ward Liquor Dealers' Association.

A meeting of this Association was held last evening at Chamberlain's Hotel, No. 77 Robinson-street. GEORGE E. SHERWOOD occupied the Chair, and H. G. CROSBIE was appointed Secretary pro tem.

The Chairman said that the meeting was called for the purpose, as he understood, of taking into consideration the propriety of establishing a newspaper as the Society's organ. He strongly recommended this course, and was followed by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, who stated that the objects to be gained by such a course would be manifest, as although several daily papers were in their favor, yet a recognized organ of their own was necessary. The meeting on being appealed to, were unanimously in favor of this course.

☞ P. G. Malony, Esq., then addressed the meeting upon the subject of the State Convention to be held on the 5th of August next, at Syracuse, and proceeded to show that a party who would uphold the balance of power over those who had turned traitors to the people and could no longer be trusted, was required.

A Committee was then appointed, consisting of Messrs. Malony, Chamberlain and Patten, with the Chairman, to draw up by-laws for the Association.

A Committee of three from each Election District was also appointed to carry the laws effectually into Malony's objects, after which the meeting adjourned.

THE NEW REQUIN HAVEN.

A large meeting of liquor dealers was held at Montgomery's Hotel, Bowlmen-street, last evening. Mr. BAMEP, of Fulton-street, presided. Capt. FRENCH and other leaders of the Anti-Liquor movement were present, and made short speeches. The principal business of the meeting, however, was in relation to the new Anti-Liquor Law paper which is to be established soon in this City on a capital of $100,000, of which some $30,000 has been contributed by Capt. FRENCH, in whose name the new journal is to be conducted.

The prospectus of the new paper—quite a lengthy one—was submitted and approved. It is addressed to the liquor-dealers of the City and County of New-York, and signed R. FRENCH. After giving the preamble and resolutions in favor of the establishment of the proposed paper, it asserts that—

"A grand task to which our united energy and power will be directed, in the approaching election, is to secure a majority of at least two-thirds in our next State Legislature, in order to crush it in the shell, or hurl back to its source the vile vetos which will otherwise alight upon any less effectual repeal of the execrable edict by which we, above all others in the community, are degraded and enthralled. Any measure of success which falls short of this essential point, would be fruitless and humiliating; and to reach the lofty object of our aim, nothing now appears to be necessary but an able and faithful daily journal, which, under our own control, and glowing with the truth and argument which so richly freight our cause, and that of popular rights with which it is so inseparably welded, would be our flag-ship, our Constitution, our "Ironsides," in this and every conflict. Circulated daily, from its first issue, through our immense organization, and, as it would rapidly be, throughout our whole National Union—warning, counseling, and directing, with unprecedented precision, from the fountain-head of political information, and supplying to every generous coadjutor in the country, the intelligence and suggestions it may desire—no other journal in existence could render as effectual a support to a cause which is that of American character and freedom, as opposed to fanatical aspersion and coercion."

It adds hopefully:

"Of the practicability of establishing a leading journal upon such a foundation, and when assured of so vast a breadth of spontaneous and interested patronage from its very advent, none but idle or jealous doubts can be entertained. Certain it is that no journal ever launched upon its career under higher guarantees of success; and the actual example of the renowned organ of the London Liquor Dealers' Society, the Morning Advertiser, which is second, only, in circulation, influence, and emolument, to its illustrious senior, the London Times, the foremost journal, not of Europe only, but of the world, decides the question of practicability, by triumphant experiment and demonstration."

The proposed journal is to be called The Age, and is to be published daily at two cents per copy.

The Liquor Law in Brooklyn.

THE TEST CASE OF SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

This case, which has hitherto been alluded to, wherein Mr. Toynbee, keeper of a hotel on Montague-street, had one bottle of brandy and a bottle of champagne seized by Officer Mathews, and agreeing not to raise any technical objections, but that every facility should be given on both sides to have the questions in dispute brought before the Supreme Court, now in session in Brooklyn, at once, as a test case, was yesterday brought up before Justice Daniel K. Smith.

N. F. Waring, Esq., Corporation Counselor, and J. M. Van Cott, Esq., appeared for the people, and A. J. Hadden and S. D. Morris, Esqs., for defendants.

After reading the complaint, Mr. Morris moved that the complaint be dismissed and defendant discharged, for the following REASONS:

First—That it does not appear by the said complaint that any crime or offence whatever has been committed by the defendant; because it does not appear by said complaint that the intoxicating liquor alleged to have been sold by the defendant is prohibited by the act under which this proceeding is instituted; because it does not appear that the liquor so charged to have been sold by the defendant, was domestic liquor and not imported liquor; because it does not appear by said complaint that the liquor so alleged to have been sold by the defendant, was not liquor, the right to sell which in this State is given by a law or treaty of the United States.

Second—That the provisions of the act under which this proceeding is had, are unconstitutional and void.

Overruled by the Court.

Counsel for defendant offered to give bail to answer any indictment that may be found.

The Judge refused to admit to bail, and requiring the defendant to plead. He pleaded "Not guilty."

The cross-examination was then proceeded with.

Thomas Matthews, sworn—Knows Thomas Toynbee, the defendant in this case; he resides in Montague-place and keeps a hotel; it is in the Third Ward; he has a public bar-room in the basement; I was in that bar-room on the 17th inst.; he sold intoxicating liquors on that day in my presence. (The defendant objects to any proof of the sale by defendant of intoxicating liquor, on the ground that the act under which this complaint is made does not authorize any complaint, oath or affirmation of the sale of intoxicating liquors, and there is, therefore, no legal foundation for the prosecution to sustain the charge.) It was brandy, a glass, and a bottle of Champagne wine, both of which were intoxicating liquors. He did on that day keep for sale in that bar-room intoxicating liquors; I thereupon, after I saw the sale, seized and took into my possession the bottle of brandy from which a glass had been sold, and the bottle of Champagne wine that had been sold, and arrested the defendant.

The witness was cross-examined by defendant's counsel as to the nature of champagne wine, which he designated as intoxicating. It was an imported article, bought and sold as such.

The defendant was adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and fined $50 and costs, and the liquor seized declared to be forfeited.

The case will be carried before the Supreme Court at an early day.

ARRESTS.

The Police of Brooklyn only made 13 arrests for intoxication during the 24 hours ending yesterday morning.

LIQUOR IN WILLIAMSBURG.

Hannah Condey and Julia Ann Baker were brought before Alderman EAMES yesterday morning, for being drunk. When placed upon the stand to testify where they had obtained the liquor, their memories became treacherous, and they did not know. The were fined $10 each.

James Bailey was brought before Justice JACOBS on the same charge, but could not tell where he had drunk. He was fined $10, which he paid, and was discharged.

The Rochester Case.

In the suit against Joseph Ran, for selling liquor contrary to the Prohibitory law, after hearing counsel on both sides, Justice Moore has rendered a decision sustaining the preliminary proceedings and the constitutionality of the law. Defendant then pleaded "Not guilty," and demanded trial by Jury. The case was set down for to-morrow, (Friday.)

Fast Sailing.

The steamship Knoxville, which sailed from this port on Saturday afternoon last, made a remarkably quick passage to Savannah. She arrived at the wharf in fifty-six hours from New-York. This, it is said, is the shortest time on record. She ran three hundred and fifty-four miles in twenty-four hours, or nearly fifteen miles an hour. She is a fine vessel, and under the command of a skillful navigator, Capt. LUDLOW.

Accidentally Drowned.

An inquest was held by Coroner O'DONNELL on the body of TIMOTHY DONOVAN, who was accidentally drowned a few days ago. The body was found at the foot of Leight-street, and the boat which belonged to him. He was by occupation a boatman.

The same Coroner held an inquest on the body of an unknown man about 25 years of age, who was found floating in the water at Pier No. 1, E. R. The body had been evidently in the water over two months.

Driving Furiously.

A man named JAMES ALPEN was brought before Justice WELSH, charged with driving his horse and wagon at an unlawful rate. He was fined by the Magistrate.

A woman named ANNE MCQUADE was taken to the City Hospital yesterday, who had been dangerously hurt by being run over by a market wagon.

The Mayor's Account of the Joseph Walker Matter.

Meeting of the Special Committee on Removal of the Wreck.

WEDNESDAY, July 18, 1855.

Present, Aldermen ELY, Chairman, VECHTEN and VARIAN.

JAMES FURBY, Esq., the Street Commissioner, was first examined, and stated that several merchants had spoken to him in regard to the wreck, and that he had acted in obedience to the Resolution of the Commissioners of Health.

Honorable FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor, was then sworn, and at the request of the Committee, gave substantially the following account of the transaction: He said—I believe as I communicated to the Board of Aldermen, "I must assume the responsibility of the whole transaction." It is true I did not pay the money or draw the requisitions, but I made the contract and did "the thing" as it is termed.

Soon after I became Mayor a complaint was entered in the Complaint-Book against the wreck, representing that it was an incumbrance, and I referred the subject to one of the Departments, I forget which, as I supposed they were the proper parties to attend to it. The matter was thus disposed of temporarily, but soon after other complaints were sent in. In April I received a memorial from many eminent merchants doing business in the vicinity, asking to have her removed, stating that she was a nuisance and prejudicial to the health of the neighborhood. The case thus presented to me in April was a sanitary question,—that this vessel was partly loaded with grain, and that as warm weather approached it would be exceedingly detrimental to health. I visited the vessel but did not inspect the character of the cargo, only her position, and I am free to admit did not examine very thoroughly the chemical or medical properties of the grain, &c. I then presumed that it was necessary for me to take some action, and accordingly sent for Mr. FLAGG, and he said that the ship ought to be taken out and that I was the proper person to order it to be done. I wrote to Mr. FURBY and he replied as I have transmitted to your Board. I had another interview with Mr. FLAGG, and he again told me I ought to have the vessel removed. I then felt myself authorized to take the vessel out, and wrote to several parties asking the probable cost and price of doing it. I sent particularly to Mr. JONES because I knew that he had had a great deal of experience in wrecking, and I wished to get his opinion as to the cost, and not with any view of making a contract with him.

Then I looked into the law, and found that the Mayor has very extensive powers in regard to sanitary matters.

After all this, I laid the subject before the Health Commissioners—a quorum of whom were present; and on my motion—I wish it to be distinctly understood—on my motion, the Board unanimously passed the resolution to have the wreck removed.

Of all the bids received for the work, Mr. JONES was the lowest bidder, and for that reason I gave him the contract; and so careful was I to have the City secured, that I took bonds for the faithful performance of the contract, signed by men worth $100,000 or $150,000. And I am willing to make good any money that the City will lose by any act of mine while Mayor, where I assume the responsibility. I mean this as a general declaration.

The law gives the Health Commissioner full power to remove any incumbrance, and the City has a good claim against the owners of this vessel for all the expenses incurred in removing her.

You cannot go behind the acts of the Commissioners. They have the power to determine whatever is prejudicial to health, and the question can not be raised "Why did they determine?" but "Have they determined?"

In answer to questions of the Committee, the Mayor said that he took no means to ascertain the depth of water there, and that he first visited the vessel sometime between the 20th and 30th of April. That many efforts had been made by parties to remove her for small sums of money, and they had all failed.

Question by Alderman ELY—By this contract are the rights of the City disposed of so far as being fully indemnified for the expense attending the removal of this wreck?

THE MAYOR—Clearly not, Sir. Every dollar can be recovered from the owners.

His Honor further said, that he considered that, as merely a question of incumbrance, he was warranted to have her removed, as an obstruction to the waters of the City and to commerce; and that whatever he thought was for the good of the City he would do it, even if it was to drive an omnibus through the City Hall. That he had made some mistakes in his life he admitted, and perhaps his greatest mistake was in being elected Mayor. [Laughter.] He also stated that no warrants were drawn until the chains were under the vessel and piles driven alongside. The Street Commissioner called on me before drawing the first warrant; after examining the vessel I consented to have it drawn. The agreement was made by me with Mr. JONES, and I supposed that he would make a sub-arrangement with some other person. As I understood afterwards Mr. JONES made a sub-contract with Mr. DODGE and he made another one with Mr. BARNES, who was practically doing the work. Mr. DODGE came to me and complained that he was doing the work and was receiving nothing, while Mr. JONES was getting paid by the City by these warrants or requisitions.

In answer to a question by Alderman ELY, the Mayor stated that most unequivocally the City had not waived any right to be indemnified by the owners for the expense of removing the vessel.

THE MAYOR—(very significantly to the Committee)—This whole thing, gentlemen, has been done by the Mayor, and the concurrent action of the Commissioners of Health; and the Mayor, when he does assume the "one man power," will be responsible to the utmost of his limited means. [Sensation.]

His Honor then referred the Committee to several authorities to be found in DAVIES' edition of the Laws of the State, relative to the City, from page 288 to 308, and also page 564; and the Committee adjourned. We annex the reference:

Page 308: The Mayor and Commissioners of Health may determine what are nuisances or dangerous to public health under the Health Laws.

The Mayor has power to summarily abate and remove anything which is dangerous to life or property. This power recently exercised in women.

Page 564: The Mayor has the power (and even a subordinate officer to him,) to destroy putrid meat or unsound meat, &c.

By the Charter, the Mayor is Chief Executive Officer of the City Government, and required to exercise constant vigilance over everything appertaining to the interests of the City. The public health is the principal matter of interest to the citizens, and he is warranted in acting summarily in abating anything which in his judgment is dangerous. Even the condition of the streets has been decided to be a sanitary subject, and as late as 1853 or 1854, was cleaned by the City Inspector under direction of the Mayor on the Board of Health. The Mayor can and has power to remove to stay progress of fire, and can and has very recently exercised, whatever he deems or takes, if need be, and forthwith, without advertising for, or making any agreement or contract whatever. I cases of this kind have occurred in Washington-square, where it was earnestly urged upon me that the act was entirely unjustifiable upon any considerations of public interest—that the utmost liability of its danger to life was without foundation.

Organizing City Inspector's Department. Passed May 29, 1849.

§ 4464. The remains of dead bodies cannot be removed except by written consent of the Mayor.

In 1849 the Common Council adopted an ordinance giving to the City Inspector power to remove any nuisance forthwith, and that officer states he considers himself as subordinate to the Mayor in that duty, having never exercised the power except by direction of the Mayor.

Recorder TILLOU and City Judge BOSTO advised him that the Mayor had full power in the premises. The authority of the Mayor has never been disputed on subjects of this character.

American Demonstration in New-Orleans.

We condense from the New-Orleans Bulletin the following account of an American Mass Meeting held in that city on the 11th inst.:

Pursuant to public announcement, last evening assembled on Lafayette-square one of the largest assemblages that ever met in this city.

Rarely, if ever, have we attended a meeting where a "sea of heads" stood out so extensively. A fine band discoursed sweet music, and fire-rockets ever and anon whizzed away and went up heavenward. At about 8 o'clock the meeting was called to order by Mr. J. O. NIXON, who nominated WM. M. PERRINS for President, and a number of Vice-Presidents.

J. B. WALTON, Esq, came forward and read resolutions, by direction of the Committee on Resolutions, which were adopted by a tremendous "Aye" from the vast concourse:

Resolved, That the Union of the States is the source of our existence, our prosperity and glory, as a free and independent people, and that it is the best safeguard of the rights of the States and the liberties of the citizen.

Resolved, That while we are determined at all times to uphold and enforce our constitutional rights on the subject of Slavery, we are not without some reliance in the good sense and patriotism of our Northern brethren; and we hope that the true and conservative men among them will of themselves cancel and rebuke the vain and unconstitutional efforts of nullifiers and abolitionists to oppose and overthrow the Federal laws and to disturb the harmony of the Union.

Resolved, That we are the friends of religious as well as civil liberty, and that we are opposed to any political proscription for religious faith, either as to the right of voting or holding office.

Resolved, That it is against the Constitution and good policy to grant any ALIEN a right to take a part in the government of the country, by voting, either in a State or Territory.

Resolved, That the time has arrived in the history and experience of our country, when such a change should be made in the naturalization laws, as will insure to Americans the government of America.

Resolved, That we cordially approve and ratify the nominations made on the Fourth of July by the American Convention at Louisiana, for State officers, and hereby pledge ourselves to a united and earnest support of the whole ticket.

Resolved, That we heartily adopt and endorse the platform or announcement of the principles put forth by the State Convention on the Fourth of July.

ALBERT PIKE was then called for, and that gentleman came forward in obedience to the summons. He received three hearty cheers. He regretted the absence of Hon. RANDALL HUNT, upon whom he passed a glowing eulogy. But as he was not present, the speaker was not at liberty to shrink from the duty imposed upon him. He then reviewed the action of the Philadelphia Convention in a clear, logical and masterly manner. He showed that the Convention had pledged itself to the maintenance of the Compromise measures of 1850, and of the legislation that tended to the welfare and honor of the South, in common with the whole country. The Convention had made a platform strong enough to drive off the Abolitionists, which the Democratic party had never done and never will do. He then spoke of the Catholic test in the Philadelphia Platform, which he disliked, but argued that the platform did not bind anybody to do anything that is very objectionable. He concluded amid much applause. When we left, at about 10½ o'clock, Mr. Hannan had commenced a speech, the crowd still being quite large.

For a rough estimate, we should think that there must have been present last evening about ten thousand people. The utmost order and good feeling prevailed throughout.

WEDNESDAY, July 18—P. M.

The Canada—with three days' later news from the Old World—reached Halifax this morning. A meagre telegraphic summary of her advices was received in this City in the afternoon and published in our evening paper. They are not important in any respect. No change of moment had occurred in business in the manufacturing districts. The Liverpool Cotton market continued heavy, with a drooping tendency. In Flour and Grain not much activity was apparent, and buy
